OFF-CAMPUS STUDY

A Broad New Horizon for Today's Student

A greatly expanded opportunity for off-campus study in foreign countries will be offered to Lindenwood students during the January 1969 interim term. Plans are being made for 16 courses in nine subjects to be conducted in France, Italy, England, Austria, Sweden, Ireland, Mexico, Guatemala and Jamaica.

The solid success of the foreign study program conducted last January and the desire to involve more students prompted the administration to increase the number of courses as well as to broaden the appeal of the offerings.

Foreign study courses in Italy, England and Mexico were offered last January in the first interim term under the College's new 4-I-4 academic calendar. Enthusiastic response of the 65 students who participated reaffirmed the administration's confidence in the value of this phase of the 4-I-4 program.

Inclusion of courses offered in cooperation with other 4-1-4 colleges will further increase the scope of foreign study opportunities available to Lindenwood students in the forthcoming January term. The College is also embarking on a Caribbean Area Studies Program in cooperation with Inter-American University in Puerto Rico. Lindenwood students participating in this program will have 15 courses to select from in six academic areas of Caribbean and Latin American study.

Augmenting the relevance of Lindenwood's off-campus program are a number of study opportunities which make use of excellent resources within the United States. Two courses conducted last January, the study of American drama in New York and a survey of modern methods of communication in Washington, D. C., illustrate the nature of this area which is kept flexible to take advantage of timely opportunities in subjects of current concern and importance.

Projected off-campus courses for the current academic year are listed on the back cover of this issue.

Teotihuacan (The Peace of the Gods) was the name given to this city many centuries before the Aztecs knew it, and to us the name seemed fitted to the god-like scale and colossal architectural concept of the complex of pyramids and plazas that stretched before us.

MEXICO

By John H. Wehmer, Assistant Professor of Art

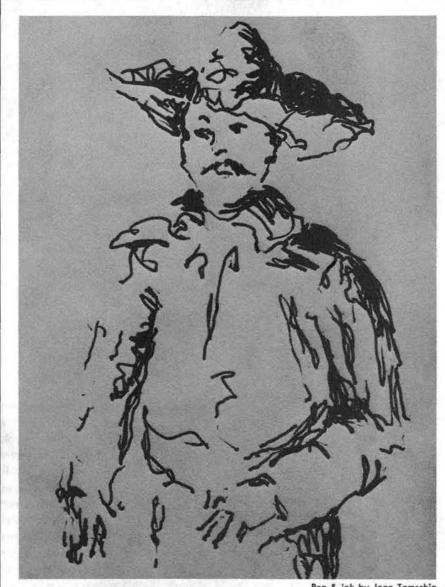

people?.... What form had life taken in this place? Our group of 18 Lindenwood students had come here knowing some of the answers to these questions, but new answers and many more questions lay locked in the stones of the city we were about to explore.

As art students, we had come armed with all the latest theories and facts, fresh from the pre-requisite course in Pre-Columbian Art. But we had learned that the facts of Mexican archeology are sometimes unreliable and often completely inaccurate. The founding of Teotihuacan had, for example, recently been recalculated by means of carbon 14 testing to have existed before the time of Christ rather than in 500 A.D. as was believed by most scholars a decade ago. We understood that the facts could change from week to week in this relatively young and growing field of study. But this realization in no way disturbed us, for we had come to Mexico not so much for the facts as for the feel of Mexican art.

Our endeavors were not restricted solely to the study of art history. Nearly half of the students in the group were primarily interested in the creation of their own art and they had taken advantage of our first days in Mexico to draw and paint in the roof-top studio of our hotel in San Miguel de Allende or in the streets of that quaint town where the stream of life was more vivid. Rich in colonial and contemporary art, San Miguel teemed with artists and craftsmen, art schools, tinshops, silversmiths, weavers and woodcarvers. We had felt the vital presence of art in the daily life of San Miguel.

And now, a new phase of our experience had begun at Teotihuacan as we began to experience the feel of ancient Mexican art in its original environment. As we made our way along The Way of the Dead, all our imagined concepts of the city's environment, suggested from our study of pictures and descriptions, faded in the overwhelming realization of Teotihuacan as an individual, personal experience for each of us.

Suddenly the facts and the feel worked together to produce a vision of this place as it might have been — each high pyramid topped by a now vanished golden temple, the great plazas filled with costumed priests and awe-struck spectators, the sickening-sweet smell of copal incense hanging heavy at the place of sacrifice, the drama of the solemn ceremonials which gave this place its raison d'etre.

If this experience of the whole city revealed exciting new visions for us, the examination of its parts was to furnish even deeper insights into the life of these vanished people. Without question the painting and sculpture found there are among the world's most outstanding.

Aware of the opportunity that was ours, we stood before the great facade of The Temple of Quezalcoatl with its imnumerable stone heads of the feathered serpent alternating with stylizations of the jaguar god. These huge images of nature—these gods so fearsome and truculent retained such immense strength and power even after 2,000 years that they seemed threatening to our very person. The loveless and demonic quality of this massive work of art was graphically revealed to us as it was meant to do in antiquity. To have designed such a powerful group in so perfect an architectural setting attests to the developed skills and fervent belief in these monsters as gods by the artists who made them.

How magnificent, these sculptures here in their original setting, the afternoon sun creating deep shadows, heightening their menacing presence! Not even the stunning collections at the dramatically lighted Museum of Anthropology in Mexico City could compare!

The exciting revelations of Teotihuacan continued for us through the afternoon. We explored underground chambers where archeologists have uncovered earlier pyramidal structures over which the later buildings had been erected; we climbed the Pyramid of the Sun to experience the staggering monumentality of that man-made mountain; we examined frescoed murals still vivid in color and design after 2,000 years of exposure and burial. And still, in the midst of all these treasures lay mounds that were unexcavated, waiting to give up their hidden glories of the vanished past.

As we fell exhausted into the bus and headed for our hotel in Mexico City, I asked myself rhetorically: "Had I misjudged the importance of that glorious day at Teotihuacan? Had the group shared my feeling of fulfillment in having felt this great art after months of classroom preparation?"

I pondered my conclusion and hoped it would be shared by the students—that the Way of the Dead had actually been for us the way to a fuller meaning of life—the life of that ancient city which still lives in its art and the meaning of our lives.

It became obvious as we returned to the hotel that the experience had indeed impressed our group and that my evaluation had been correct. The enthusiasm and excitement generated among the students was of such intensity that all my doubts vanished.

Report by Pat Penkoske

Patricia Penkoske, a Lindenwood senior, St. Charles, Mo., records her impressions of the foreign study course in Florence, Italy.

T was great to be able to sort of "pass through time" as we traveled from Ravenna to Padua, Florence and Rome and could trace the changing philosophy from the sixth to the seventeenth century. For the first time we could experience an entire building in its environment instead of trying to get an impression from slides or plates of details.

In Ravenna, the dominant communication was of a spirituality implicit in the allegorical mosaics of St. Apollinaire in Classe, San Vitale, and the Mausoleum of Galla Placida. In Padua, we saw the Byzantine forms used in Ravenna translated by Giotto to make a humanistic statement of man's relationship to the divine. In Florence, where this humanist philosophy was further developed and culminated, we could for the first time experience the Renaissance as a totality. Previously, I had unconsciously subdivided the Renaissance into categories of art, literature and history, but after seeing the palatial rooms of the Palazzo Vecchio with walls and ceilings covered with the mythological creatures so loved by Renaissance writers, and realizing that the Medicis actually occupied these rooms and Savonarola was imprisoned in the same building, these categories seemed unreal and divorced from the truth of the situation.

Tiny villas barely discernible in the hazy background of a Masaccio painting could be seen this time while standing in Piazza Michelangelo and having the actual atmosphere and not atmospheric perspective blur the distant hill town of Fiesole.

Giotto's landscapes had always seemed rather stark and stylized but in many sections, naturally stylized cyprus trees were the only objects in sight. There are so many other things I could possibly talk about—the overpowering ostentatiousness of St. Peter's, the harmonious merging of many styles and traditions at San Marco in Venice, the coherence of the Baptistry Cathedral and Bell tower complex at Pisa—or hill towns such as Assisi, Perugia or Verona. Each of these places was fascinating in a different way and contributed to a thoroughly wonderful learning experience.

Many things did happen that were definitely not of an academic nature, but I can honestly say that this interim term opened up more opportunities for a learning experience than the restricted environment of a classroom would ever hope to. In addition to sharing ideas at the seminars we had every Monday, Wednesday and Friday, each day from after breakfast until dinner offered the exciting and spontaneous confrontation with several centuries of the greatest masterpieces of art.

An "Ugly American" In Brazil

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Diane Stanley was born in Guatemala and lived there until she was fifteen. She graduated from North Des Moines High School and attended Lindenwood from 1955-57. After graduation from the University of Missouri School of Journalism in 1959, she spent a year in Chile on a Fulbright scholarship. She subsequently worked for two years in New York as a researcher in the Latin American section of Time Magazine, joining the U.S. Information Agency in 1962 as a television writer. She was working at the Voice of America in 1966 when she joined the USIA's Foreign Service and was assigned as press officer to the U.S. Embassy in Rio de Janeiro. One of the USIA's few women press officers, Miss Stanley will complete her three-year Brazil tour of duty in 1969.

DURING THE six years I have been with the U. S. Information Agency my colleagues and I have heard so much about the Central Intelligence Agency that we now simply refer to it as "the other Agency." For certainly there is no dearth of books and articles about the activities of what one writer has called "the invisible government." All of this may be very well, but I suggest that at least as much attention should be given to "another agency"—one whose chief objective is to explain and gain support for the U. S., its policies and way of life. Yet the vast majority of Americans has no idea what their government is saying about the U. S. abroad.

It should be explained, however, that this is partly due to a strict Congressional prohibition on the dissemination of any of USIA's material (whether press, radio, television or motion pictures) within the United States. The idea behind such legislation is that Congress does not want the U. S. government propagandizing its own people. For example, USIA's film "Years of Lightning, Days of Drums," which covered major accomplishments of President Kennedy's administration and his funeral, required an act of Congress to be shown in the United States.

It would be presumptuous for me to try to describe all of USIA's many activities around the world, nor would it be possible to do so within the scope of this article. However, as press officer at the U. S. Embassy in Rio de Janeiro for the past two years, I can provide an idea of what kinds of press activities USIS* carries out in Brazil, as well as an indication of some of the major problems we face in the propaganda field here.

As press officer I oversee a staff of twenty-three Brazilians – everything from reporters and photographers to mimeograph operators. Our job is to issue to the Rio press two daily press packets. (Our releases are also pouched to eight USIS branch posts throughout Brazil.) In these packets are photographs, feature stories and timely news items taken from the teletype service transmitted each day from USIA in Washington.

Of course most U. S. newspapers publish only that material provided by the wire services or written by journalists on staff. However in Latin America it is common practice for newspapers to publish paid news stories (with no attribution) or simply print – free of charge – stories that are sent to the newspapers. It is in this latter category that USIS material falls.

&quot;Abroad, "USIA" becomes the "U. S. Information Service," since we operate as a service of the Washington-based Agency.

When our daily press packet hits the editor's desk, he is free to throw it in the wastepaper basket, file it for future use or publish it the next day. Fortunately, our material is usually of such interest that much of it is published, often, however, without attribution to USIS. But our concern is simply to have the stories published and, in fact, it is often to USIS's advantage not to have the material attributed.

To understand what kind of material is used and how it is presented, it is necessary to know what USIS's objectives are throughout the world and, specifically, in Latin America. They fall into at least three broad categories: support of U. S. policies and "the American way of life"; anti-Communist material and, in Latin America, support for the Alliance for Progress.

The first objective is obviously the largest and also the most difficult to define. U. S. government policies, both at home and abroad, cover a vast area. Similarly, support for "the American way of life" includes subjects as varied as our democratic system of government to new advances in space and developments in the arts. Anti-Communist material — not nearly as hard-hitting as during the Cold War — involves such things as Soviet repression of intellectuals and economic difficulties in Cuba. The third objective, the Alliance for Progress, entails not only publicizing U. S. financial assistance to Latin America, but also encouraging self-help and the numerous social and economic changes the U. S. would like to see take place in this hemisphere.

In the briefest possible way, then, this describes USIA's objectives in Latin America. In addition, each USIS post has its own country objectives which generally follow the broad, world-wide guidelines laid down by the Agency in Washington.

Treatment of these objectives is handled in at least four ways. First, there is our teletype material – short, timely articles filed by USIA's International Press Service (IPS) staff and its correspondents around the world. Since USIA is prohibited from competing with the wire services, stories are treated somewhat differently from the way UPI or the AP might cover a story.

Thus IPS reports many stories the wire services are not interested in. Cornerstone-laying ceremonies for the new Brazilian embassy in Washington may be of little concern to the wire services, but IPS will file a story because it knows readers in Brazil may be interested. In addition, IPS covers stories it knows the wire services are filing on, but which will receive somewhat different treatment when reported by USIA. UPI may lead its story on the Paris peace talks quoting a propagandistic blast from one of the North Vietnamese delegates; the IPS story from Paris for the same day will probably lead with a less sensational angle and, instead, perhaps stress what a member of the U. S. delegation may have said.

The chancellery of the U. S. Embassy in Ria de Janeiro, the world's third largest U. S. mission, is the nerve center for the 1,000 official Americans assigned throughout Brozil. The U. S. Information Service complement of 57 Foreign Service officers, stationed in cities stretching from the Uruguayan border to the Amazon, is one of the largest missions USIS maintains in any one country.

USIS press material is divided into at least three other categories. Most influential are the "by-line articles," many of them written by top figures in our government. In addition, IPS has its own distinguished writers who are unknown in the U. S., but widely recognized here. These writers produce the "think pieces," the commentaries on international events that explain and put into perspective the U.S. position on any number of issues.

The third type of material we make available to the press are unsigned feature stories. These usually fall under the "support for the American way of life" objective and cover the most diverse subjects: urban renewal in Boston, educational television in New York, a new kind of weed killer being used by U. S. farmers or an all-Negro theater group making its successful debut on Broadway. These stories are usually illustrated with photographs and, as might be expected, receive wide placement in the press here.

Finally, there is the material we originate: a story with photograph on the signing of a new Alliance for Progress loan, an article on a U. S. Navy aircraft carrier that will be visiting Rio for three days or (and this much less frequently) an Embassy statement setting the facts straight on the bombing of a USIS library in Sao Paulo or a brief, but forthright clarification denying the U. S. government in Brazil is involved in birth control programs, as a recent press campaign here attempted to imply.

The question that naturally follows from this quick run-down of USIS press activities in Brazil is, of course, how effective are our efforts? But, unfortunately, there is no real way of knowing. As the late Edward R. Murrow, a former director of USIA, used to say, "No cash register rings, no light flashes, no perceptible sign shows when a man changes his thinking about some particular aspect of the U. S., its people, policies and way of life." Having been "in the field" for the past two years, I am made aware daily of this fact. If a USIS article is published, who reads it? And if João Silva reads it, does it change his mind?

My own impression is that we are not changing many minds here on three basic issues. The fact that we are not, however, is not a criticism of USIS, but simply a recognition of the enormously complicated problems the U.S. government and its people face in these areas. If USIS has not been particularly successful in this regard, I believe it is a result of the American people's own difficulties and uncertainties in grappling with these problems.

The first issue — and perhaps the one most Americans have the least to say about — is the trite but always inflammatory cry of "Yankee imperialism." The reasons for this ever-popular rallying cry are both historical (and in many cases, no longer valid) and current: dislike and fear of our economic might, disagreement with U. S. government policies in Latin America and elsewhere and simply envy of our power and the "good life" many Americans enjoy. The Alliance for Progress has helped convince many Latin Americans that we genuinely want to see others enjoy, insofar as is possible, the fruits and benefits of twentieth century technology. And perhaps in time, as the countries of this hemisphere become more fully developed, the charge that we are an imperialist nation will eventually be forgotten.

An integral part of the criticism of U. S. policies in Latin America are our policies elsewhere — namely in Vietnam. And this is the second big issue we confront here. In the two years I have been in Brazil, USIS has distributed literally hundreds of items on Vietnam. Yet the issue is as unpopular as it ever was. To most Brazilians our presence in that war-torn country is simply the most virulent current example of our innate imperialism, and no amount of explaining we are there to protect the rights of a free and independent Vietnam and to prevent Communism from taking over in Southeast Asia will convince Brazilians otherwise.

Of course, with the American people themselves so divided on the Vietnam war (and the newspapers here publishing the results of all public opinion polls on this subject, as well as the remarks of numerous Presidential candidates) it is perhaps not surprising that we have not been able to rally strong support here for the U. S. government's position. Hopefully now that peace talks are underway in Paris we eventually won't have the problem of trying to explain—and make palatable—our position in Vietnam.

The third and most complex problem we confront in Brazil is the race issue. In this country, where over one-fourth of the people are Negro or carry Negro blood, our racial problems are simply unexplainable. This is not to say that Brazil doesn't have its own subtle, but very real racial problems. There is no question that discrimination exists, but it is far less apparent than in the U. S. All of which gives many Brazilians a smug feeling of superiority. But when they are not being condescending, most Brazilians are genuinely concerned and puzzled as to why such deep feeling has existed and exists against Negroes.

Here again, USIS has released countless articles trying to explain our racial problems, while at the same time detailing the progress that is being made to integrate Negroes more fully into our society. But I'm not sure our material is very effective. Last summer, when the rioting in numerous U. S. cities was at its height, a mulatto taxi cab driver asked me if it was true that Negroes in the U. S. are forced to live in certain areas of each city. He also wanted to know why whites and Negroes are not allowed to marry. Like so many other Brazilians, he had an extremely distorted impression of the racial situation in America.

Needless to say, when rioting Negroes destroy great portions of our cities each summer, USIS's task becomes doubly difficult. Apart from the fact that the riots naturally are given far greater (and more sensational) press treatment than any of our material is ever given, many Brazilians sympathize with the rioters. As one Brazilian guilelessly lectured me: "You whites have kept the Negroes down for too long. Now they're mad and you're having to pay for it."

The assassination of Martin Luther King only added to the impression that we are a nation of racists. Unfortunately, it also reminded most people of John Kennedy's assassination which, parenthetically, many Brazilians still regard as the result of a conspiracy. The day after Martin Luther King's murder, I received a phone call from an unknown Brazilian who said he had just heard the news of King's death. He wanted me to confirm it. He then asked how old King was, how many children he had and if the killer had been arrested.

Finally, he asked a naive but difficult question, "Why was Mr. King killed? Was it because he was a Negro?" I said we could only presume the killer was psychotic, but that until he was apprehended, there was no way of knowing what had motivated him. Then my caller asked the most painful question of all: "What is wrong with your country? First you kill President Kennedy and now Martin Luther King. Why?" Adept propagandist that I'm supposed to be, I had no answer.

All of which is perhaps a round-about way of saying that USIS can only be as effective as the government and people it represents. I have now been out of the United States for two years and have begun to feel increasingly that I am out of touch with my country. Certainly I cannot really explain the race riots, nor perhaps can most Americans living in the United States. But until we find some solution for this problem, which from abroad appears to be sundering the entire social fabric of America, we are going to experience increasing misunderstanding, disrespect and even dislike on the part of our friends abroad.

"Since this article was written in late May, Senator Robert Kennedy has been assassinated. In this country his death caused nearly as much shock, dismay and emotional outpouring as did his brother's. Convinced the late Senator would be the next President, many Brazilians felt as though they were again being denied a Kennedy in the White House—one who would bring to the U.S. and the world youth, glamour, liberalism and deep friendship and understanding for Latin America. The fact that most Brazilians immediately assumed Senator Kennedy was the victim of a vast conspiracy, which certain "interests" in the United States had instigated and would keep secret, makes his death only that much more tragic for a country that is supposed to be one of the world's most law-abiding, democratic nations. As one Brazilian sarcastically observed, "In Latin America when we don't like a President, we overthrow his government and let the man leave the country. In the U.S. you kill your President or those who might become President."

Miss Lichliter Has New Responsibilities

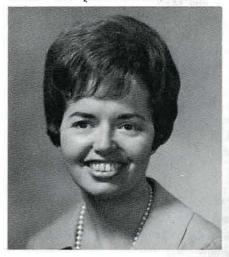

Miss Mary L. Lichliter, who has served as Dean of Students for the past 20 years, has been named Director of Lindenwood's expanded Continuing Education program for mature women. Miss Lichliter, whose new title will be Dean of Continuing Education and Career Planning, organized the continuing education program at Lindenwood and is responsible for the present success of the program. In her new position the Dean will also direct an on-going placement and career planing program for all Lindenwood students and graduates.

Distinguished Alumna Gift

Lindenwood has received a bequest totaling $519,186.72 from the estate of Pearle Aikin-Smith Syers, distinguished educator who attended Lindenwood in 1895. Mrs. Syers was chairman of the speech department at Cornell College in Iowa, one-time Dean of Women at the University of Southern California, and Dean of Pepperdine College in the early '50's. Her most generous gift enables Lindenwood to establish the Pearle Aikin-Smith Syers Scholarship.

Mrs. McClanahan — Acting Dean of Students

Serving as Acting Dean of Students until the college selects a successor to Miss Lichliter is Nancy Alvis McClanahan, Alumnae Executive Secretary since February, 1966. A 1956 graduate of Lindenwood, Mrs. McClanahan was secretary of the St. Louis Lindenwood College Alumnae Club from 1962-64 and was Alumnae Reunion Day chairman in 1964. She represents Lindenwood in the American Alumni Council, a national organization of college alumni administrators, development officers and publications editors.

Summer School Success Story

More than 200 persons, the largest summer enrollment in the history of Lindenwood, registered for classes and workshops during the 1968 summer session. Dr. Howard A. Barnett, professor and chairman of the Department of English and Director of the Senior Synthesis, was the summer school director.

Riding Data Needed

Meanwhile, back at the "Horse Palace" (campus colloquialism for L.C.'s attractive new riding stables), an ambitious project is under way. Riding instructor Mrs. Fern Palmer Bittner is assembling a large scrapbook which she hopes will eventually depict completely the history of the riding program at the College. Pictures, horse show programs and informational data from the past are needed. Alumnae who participated in riding at Lindenwood are urged to check their belongings for pertinent items and send them to Mrs. Bittner at the College. Any contribution, however small, will be appreciated.

Named Acting Chaplain

The Reverend Robert H. Betts, rector of Trinity Episcopal Church, St. Charles, Missouri, since April, 1968, will serve as Acting Chaplain at Lindenwood. He will counsel students on a part-time basis.

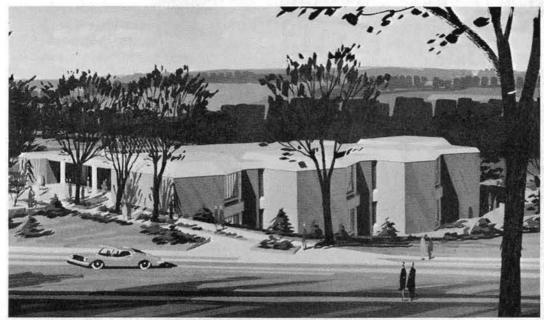

A native of Kansas City, Missouri, Father Betts received the B.A. degree from the University of Missouri at Columbia and the Bachelor of Sacred Theology degree from Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, Massachusetts. He also attended Harvard University and Johns Hopkins University.

Father Betts served as assistant at the Church of St. Michael and St. George, Clayton, Missouri, and at Grace Church, Salem, Massachusetts, before assuming the rectorship at Trinity Church in St. Charles.

The Reverend and Mrs. Betts reside with their two children, Michael and Katherine, at 2501 Fair Oaks Drive, St. Charles, Missouri.

NEWS & EVENTS

Mary Lou Blocher Bilsborough, Recipient of 1968 Alumnae Certificate of Merit Award

Mary Lou Blocher Bilsborough '27 received the Lindenwood Alumnae Certificate of Merit Award on Alumnae Reunion Day, May 4, 1968. She was presented to President John Anthony Brown by Barbara Ringer Hamill '32, President of the Alumnae Association, who spoke of "the outstanding accomplishments of one of Lindenwood's most distinguished graduates."

As Director of Social and Student Activities at Southwest Missouri State College, Mrs. Bilsborough inspired a program that brought about the establishment of the first student center there. A new lounge at Southwest Missouri Union Building was dedicated to her and a plaque was erected designating the room as Bilsborough Lounge.

She has served as the Social Director of the Midwest International Seminar held in Haslev, Denmark, and as a consultant in the Planning of student buildings at foreign universities, including recently the University at Kabul, Afghanistan. Since 1954 Mrs. Bilsborough has been Social Director and Assistant Director in charge of Public Relations at the Purdue University Memorial Union.

Association Honors Three Retirees

The Alumnae Association honored two retiring faculty members and a member of the Administration at the Alumnae Day luncheon May 4, 1968. Citations were presented to Dr. Mary Talbot, professor and chairman of Biological Sciences, who taught at Lindenwood for 32 years; Dr. Homer Clevenger, professor of history and political science, who has been on the faculty since 1941; and Mr. Robert C. Coulson, vice-president and business manager, who joined the staff in 1930. The three retirees have given a combined total of 97 years of service to Lindenwood.

New Council Members

Three alumnae were elected as Council members with terms to expire in May, 1971.

Helen Culbertson Beste '32

A native of Carroll, Iowa, Council member Helen Beste now resides in St. Charles, Missouri, with her husband, Robert, and their daughter, Barbara, a senior at St. Louis University. Their son, Bob, Jr., is serving in the U. S. Navy. Helen belongs to St. Charles Lindenwood College Club, the Daughters of the American Revolution, and the P. E. O. Sisterhood. She is a member of the Board of Directors of the American Red Cross, St. Louis chapter, and a member of the Committee for the Community Support of Lindenwood College.

Marilyn Malone Gustafson '63

After graduation from Lindenwood, Marilyn traveled in Mexico and spent two years at the University of New Mexico in Albuquerque, where she earned her M.A. in Spanish. She now teaches Spanish at Wichita State University where she finds the atmosphere "stimulating and satisfying." Since June, 1966, she has been married to Jan Wade Gustafson, a member of the Sales Department of Beech Aircraft Corporation.

Marie Christensen Robb '38

Marie attended Lindenwood two years before going on to the University of Nebraska to receive her degree. She and her husband, Dr. John A. Robb, a radiologist, have five children, and the family live in Indianapolis. Marie is a member of the Board of Directors of the Hoosier Capital Council and chairman of the Lindenwood Admissions Council in Indianapolis.

Let's Make Annual Giving Work

By Edwin Van Woert

Some years ago, while serving on the staff of a national voluntary health organization, I had frequent occasion to muse on the relationship of "the organization" to the volunteers who made it tick. Then the conclusion seemed inescapable that we as staff people didn't demand nearly enough in the way of general commitment and specific performance from our volunteers. After all, people volunteer for a cause because of a belief in its value. Now the relationships have changed. The "organization" is now Lindenwood, and I'm the volunteer. But, oddly enough, the conclusion remains the same.

Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Van Woert, both Lindenwood graduates, are national co-chairmen of the 1968-69 Alumnae Annual Campaign. She is the former Julie Orr ('59), and "Van" received his degree in 1958. The Van Woerts live in Northfield, Illinois and "Van" is a stock broker in the Chicogo office of Bache & Co., Inc.

Greater demands are going to be made on all of us. And if that isn't too startling an opener, please read on.

Last year, the most successful giving campaign in our history produced less than twenty-one thousand dollars from under eleven hundred users. For those who gave the average gift was about twenty dollars. But since only about twelve per cent of the total alumnae actually gave, the average gift is really only about $2.35 per alum. No feat of public relations or self-delusion can convert this into anything other than the miserly performance it is. So we must begin by questioning why.

First, if we are to be realistic, we must grant that there is a small number of alumnae for whom Lindenwood did not represent a happy or stimulating educational or social experience. It is unreasonable to expect that these alums will extend their support. Let's arbitrarily call this group five per cent of the total (probably a high figure) and therefore eliminate 450 from our thinking as prospective contributors. Second, a significant group of recent alumnae are pursuing graduate study, or are married to graduate students (or both), and are simply not yet professionally or domestically established, and cannot afford to make significant contributions yet. To allow for the "weight" of larger recent graduating classes, we'll liberally call this figure ten per cent, and eliminate another 900 giving prospects. Third, are the "lost" alumnae for whom we have no current addresses and who are not receiving up-to-date information about Lindenwood and its financial need. These number about seven hundred.

So of something over 6700 "live" prospects, eleven hundred are givers. Needed: a new way to appeal to 5,600-plus alumnae who are too busy, forgetful, or disinterested.

You are the key to this "new way." You are, at this moment, demonstrating a degree of interest by having read this far. In all likelihood you are one of the eleven hundred. In all probability we can count on you to help solve our Alumnae Civing problem. How? First, by increasing your gift. Second, and just as important, be a center of influence for the campaign among other Lindenwood alums in your community or among your classmates, by discussing it in person, or via the mails. Third, keep yourself informed about the progress of the college and its growth through the alumnae office. The more personal this campaign becomes the bigger will be our Committee of the Eleven Hundred.

This is the only reason for assailing you with the above, less than positive view of alumnae giving-you are the only person who can do anything about it. Reams of mail from the alumnae office can make little impression in the din of promotional and fund-raising appeals constantly around us. Your personal interest and action can make a difference. Interest and action are always qualities of a small minority, so it's essential that you do your part.

After all, Lindenwood has always stood for an approach to higher education bespeaking a quality which has set it above the crowd. A growing faculty and student body-growing in numbers and qualification-isn't exciting simply because of an increased head-count. Rather, it is a recognition that today's specialized and compartmentalized world is in even greater need of the liberal arts institution capable of synthesizing this fragmentation into a meaningful whole. Most of all, it is in greatest need of the people this approach to education can produce.

To the Eleven Hundred the college is grateful. Toward the other 5,600 it remains hopeful. But you, an individual, are the key. Please help!

1967-68 Alumnae Annual Giving Report

Alumnae giving was UP fifty per cent this past year and all class fund agents, subagents and contributing alumnae have much of which to be proud!

However, among all the ÛP-things are costs—in both the operating costs of the College and those of the Alumnae Office. The only and the most effective thing we can do to help the College is to increase our gift each year to keep pace with the times. As for the Alumnae Office, we can bring about economies which would not affect our efficiency or our image.

One such economy, which we are implementing in this issue of the BULLETIN, is to keep our annual financial report as brief as possible. We have eliminated the individual listing of contributors by classes. Members of the Linden Leaf Society (contributors of $100 or more) will continue to be listed, however, as such substantial contributors should

We may not have control over the price of paper, printing, cuts, etc., but we can control how much paper we use. We hope that you are in accord with our action in attempting to keep UPgoing cost DOWN.

All unrestricted gifts received in the Alumnae Annual Giving Campaign are used for current operating costs. Any other gifts directed to specific use such as the Library, Scholarships, etc., though counted in the total of alumnae giving during a fiscal year, do not show in the final figure of the Alumnae Annual Giving.

Alumnae Annual Giving is the life-blood of the present and future development of Lindenwood College. Because we, as alumnae, care about the quality of the development of our Alma Mater, we must show tangible interest by UP-ing our individual gifts to the Annual Giving Program, then supporting our specific interests by channeling other gifts into a chosen area.

The 1968-69 Alumnae Annual Giving, under the leadership of Julie and Ed Van Woert, will soon be under way. So it's UP with our gifts and DOWN with unnecessary costs. REPORT ON SPECIAL FUNDS

The following special funds have received support from

Alumnae and friends of the college.

THE ALICE PARKER CHAIR OF ENGLISH LITERA-TURE—The position is currently held by Professor Howard A. Barnett, Ph.D., Chairman of the English Department. Income from the fund is used to help underwrite the salary of the faculty member. Established in 1961 in memory of Dr. Alice Parker who served as Professor of English Literature at Lindenwood from 1928 to 1961. Contributions to the fund have helped it grow from $7,177.80 in 1936 to $7,959.30 on June 15, 1968.

THE GUY C. MOTLEY SCHOLARSHIP-Established by the alumnae in 1950 in memory of Guy C. Motley. Income from the fund is used to help deserving students. The balance in the fund at June 15, 1968, was $6,786.49.

THE DR. AND MRS. H. C. RITTER SCHOLARSHIP FUND—Established by the Ritter family and friends in 1966 in honor of this distinguished St. Charles couple. The income is used to help deserving students. The balance in the fund at June 15, 1968, was $4,631.

Matching Gift Programs

Two Can Give as Easily as One

If you contribute to Lindenwood and are associated with one of the companies whose names appear in this listing, you can arrange to have a second gift sent to your alma mater.

How do you arrange to have the contributions sent? Once you have made your gift to Lindenwood, just inform the appropriate persons at your company that you have done so. A matching check will be sent to Lindenwood thereafter, indicating that your gift made the matching gift possible.

Gift matching is one way in which businesses and corporations are assisting education. They would like to help Lindenwood as much as you. Please check the listing to see if the company you or your husband is associated with has a matching gift program.
