Obama proposes changing student loans

By Ashley Christopher
Staff Writer

Colleges and universities around the country would see a vast change in the student loan process under President Obama's 2010 budget proposal to end lending from private institutions.

The proposal, announced Feb. 26, seeks to replace the 44-year-old Federal Family Education Loan Program (FFELP) with an expanded Federal Direct Student Loan Program (FDSLPL).

"Under the current plan, universities can choose whether to use the FFELP or the FDSLPL for student lending," said Mark Kantrowitz, publisher of the financial aid information Web site FinAid.org.

FFELP loans are provided by private lenders, such as banks, credit unions and loan institutions. The federal government provides a subsidy to companies offering student loans and guarantees them against default, Kantrowitz said.

FDSLPL loans are provided directly by the government to students through their schools.

According to Obama's budget, eliminating subsidies to private lenders involved with the FFELP would save about $4 billion a year and make loans more accessible to students.

"A lack of financial resources should never obstruct the promise of college opportunity," Obama said in a March 10 statement. "And it's America's shared responsibility to ensure that more of our students not only reach the doors of college, but also persist, succeed and obtain their degree."

Loans provided by the FFELP historically have overshadowed government direct loans. According to the U.S. Department of Education, last year the FFELP loaned about $56 billion to six million students, compared with the FDSLPL's $14 billion loaned to 1.5 million students.

Lindenwood University offers loans through the FFELP, said Lori Bode, director of the financial aid office. She said it wasn't clear whether current loans would be immediately switched to government direct loans if the president's proposal passes. It still is making its way through Congress.

"We don't know yet if the FFELP loans will be phased out or if they will be switched directly to direct loans," Bode said.

Bode estimated that during the 2008-2009 school year,

Lindenwood undergraduate and graduate students will receive about $45 million in government subsidized loans.

Passage of the proposal would bring only one major change in the student lending process, Bode said.

"Students will still have to fill out a FAFSA (Free Application for Federal Student Aid), receive an award letter and go through entrance counseling," she said.

New dean steps into Fine Arts role

By Tierney Knigge
Staff Writer

The School of Fine and Performing Arts will get a new leader June 1 after longtime Dean Marsha Parker officially steps down to assume other roles at the university.

"I am looking forward to making teaching my primary role, because the thing I love most about Lindenwood is the interaction with the students," Parker said in a recent newsletter announcing the change.

Donnell Walsh, now the associate dean of fine and performing arts, will replace Parker, who has led the school for 14 years.

"The most important goal I would like to accomplish is to ensure that our gifted department faculty members are free to initiate and present within their areas of expertise," Walsh said.

"I want their input to be invited and part of an ongoing spirit of collaboration."

Parker, an associate professor who previously served as director of evening and graduate programs and alumni relations, will become a full-time professor of theater.

She also will become assistant coordinator of the LCIE program, helping to integrate Lindenwood's evening adult programs with those in the day school.

Walsh has been with Lindenwood for almost 18 years, serving in a variety of positions.

Walsh was both an assistant and an associate professor of theatre before he became the associate dean in 2008.

As dean, Walsh will supervise theater, fashion, art, dance and music programs at Lindenwood.

Walsh said he hopes to keep a positive, caring atmosphere where students can showcase their talents.

"The Scheidegger Center is a tremendous partner in getting all of our highest ambitions for our students and personal growth realized," Walsh said.

Since the opening of the $32 million J. Scheidegger Center for the Arts last year, students have top-of-the-line equipment and plenty of space for their use and development.

Hockey champs face carbon monoxide scare

By M. E. Brown
Staff Writer

For the No.1-ranked men's ice hockey team, the biggest concern during their American Collegiate Hockey Association (ACHA) championship tournament wasn't Penn State University or the University of Illinois. It wasn't unstoppable offense or unfair penalties. The biggest problem that the Lions had to overcome on Saturday, March 16, was something they couldn't even see or hear or smell.

It was carbon monoxide.

According to a report, the Gates Mills Fire Department discovered that the Gilmour Academy Ice Arena, hosting the tournament in Gates Mills, Ohio, was responsible for approximately 100 spectators and players becoming ill with complaints of dizziness, blurry vision, nausea and headaches.

Fox 8 News in Cleveland, Ohio quoted LU junior Tim

Gardner, "I was short of breath. Every shift I got off I couldn't really breathe that much and then I started getting a headache."

The problem was attributed to several different factors. First the zamboni used to smooth the ice malfunctioned. Second, the arena's ventilation was poor. Lastly, many buses were idling next to the fresh air intake for the building.

The arena was shut down Saturday evening when numerous players were complaining of feeling ill. Once the levels of carbon monoxide were no longer elevated, the building was reopened Sunday morning.

Yet the men didn't let this slow them down. They went on to play the rest of the tournament and beat no. 4 Illinois on Wednesday night with a final of 4 to 1.

Student safety an issue with dorm fire alarms going unheeded

'False alarms' prove dangerous when residents ignore evacuation procedures

By M. E. Brown
Staff Reporter

Late in the evening of March 2, a familiar sound echoed through the halls of Dorm G.

The loud, piercing cry of the fire alarm was nothing new to the residents of the dorm (also known as Bezemes). It was one of just three alarms that happened during the first week of March.

Freshman Kyle O'Donnell had just gotten out of the shower and had started on his homework when he heard the blaring noise. He said he was more irritated rather than worried or afraid.

Twenty minutes later, dorm Resident Director Jesse Brandt was checking to ensure all students had exited the building when he happened upon O'Donnell's room.

Brandt found O'Donnell still working on homework, using headphones to tune out the sound of the alarm.

"We have to evacuate the building," said Michelle Giessman, director of housing.

The university could be fined for violations such as people, like O'Donnell, remaining in the building when the fire department arrives. "That's the law."

While a nuisance, the protocol is in place for the students' safety.

Wade Hampton, director of residential services and associate dean of students, cannot remember the last time LU had a fire in a dorm. Residents in the town of South Orange, N.J., aren't as fortunate.

It was early morning on Jan. 19, 2000, when news spread of what would soon be considered one of the deadliest college fires in recent U.S. history. At Seton Hall University, fire trucks, ambulances and police cars surrounded the Boland Hall dorm. Amidst the crowd of spectators, disheveled residents and rescue crews were ambulances containing the bodies of three freshmen.

As the smoke cleared, it was revealed that 58 people were injured, along with the three deceased.

Over the following years, the reason for the fire was discovered. It was arson; two of the residents set it as a prank.

Officials believed that the numbers of injuries were so high because students didn't take the alarm seriously due to the many false alarms in the first semester.

This has become an issue at Lindenwood as well.

"[Students] put duct tape over the speaker on the alarms to muffle them," said Adam Hannaford, O'Donnell's suitemate.

Giessman said that the administration has become aware of students also removing batteries from the alarms.

In an effort to better educate students on the dangers of ignoring alarms, Giessman and the administration have joined with Assistant Chief/Fire Marshal Richard Oney and the rest of the St. Charles Fire Department.

Because of Oney's concern that not every college student "takes it seriously," he educates freshmen at Lindenwood about the "Get Out and Stay Alive" program.

This and other procedures being put in place for next semester to deter pranks leaves Oney feeling secure about the safety of the students in his city.

Carrying on the Legacy Scupin directs global center, awareness

By Brittany Jalinsky
Staff Writer

Ray Scupin stepped into the classroom at Lindenwood University 28 years ago ready to share his knowledge of global and cultural awareness.

Now, as the director of the new Center for International Global Studies, he's extending that mission, eager to demonstrate how "the United States is interconnected economically, politically and culturally with many countries throughout the world."

"Globalization can be a traumatic experience for different societies and communities as they adapt to a rapidly changing world," the chairman of the School of Anthropology and Sociology said. "We need to become more aware of these global processes if we are going to be successful in our adjustment to future demands."

Helping students broaden their understanding of the world will be one of main goals of the center, which is scheduled to open its doors on June 1. The center is dedicated to expanding global awareness for both American and international students.

"All students at Lindenwood should become more aware of global trends throughout the world," said Scupin, winner of the Missouri Governor's Award in 1999 for Excellence in Teaching.

American students in particular, he said, "can no longer just focus on their own communities or neighborhoods, because the U.S. is being transformed by globalization."

Scupin has helped develop a master's program that will welcome its first students next fall. The program offers courses designed to help students obtain careers in government, international business, international organizations, the World Bank, or the International Monetary Fund.

As part of the program, LU will be partnering with the Azerbaijan NATO Summer School Program June 14 through July 15. This excursion will include one week of in-class training taught by NATO diplomats concerning crisis management and conflict resolution, a week of lectures covering the political and religious history of Azerbaijan and one week examining the country's history and culture. On the western shore of the Caspian Sea, Azerbaijan declared its independence from the former Soviet Union in 1991.

A lecture series made up of scholars who have done previous international research also has been developed for the 2009-2010 academic year.

Starting next fall, Scupin himself will be managing and editing the "Journal of International and Global Studies," an online journal that will gather essays from around the world.

Scupin, who received his Ph.D. in anthropology from the University of California, Santa Barbara, in 1978, is conducting research on Islam, ethnicity and globalization issues.

Maximilliane Weiner enjoys zip-lining through tree canopies in Monteverde. The semester study abroad program provides students with opportunities to learn in and outside the classroom while being exposed to the Costa Rican culture.

Students expand cultural knowledge in Costa Rica

By Hiroko Furuhashi
Staff Writer

Rich ethnicity and the warmth of Costa Rican people are teaching LU students more than just language skills this spring.

The Semester Study Abroad program in the Central American country is offered each year, said organizer Nancy Cloutier-Davis, associate professor of Spanish.

The students go to Heredia, a suburb of San Jose, the capital of Costa Rica, and study for 15 weeks.

This semester, 10 students have been studying at the language school Intercultura, taking classes such as writing, history and literature.

All the classes are taught by local Spanish teachers.

Junior Estey Masten took the opportunity to study abroad in Costa Rica to improve her ability to speak and write Spanish. "I also wanted to learn about another culture and get out of my comfort zone," Masten said in an e-mail interview.

The students attend classes Monday through Friday. During the evening and weekend, they can participate in a variety of activities or trips. Intercultura organizes the activities, which include Latin dance, cooking classes and trips to the various cities.

Senior Maximilliane Weiner has enjoyed astonishing outdoor adventures that the tropical country offers. She went zip-lining - moving through tree canopies on a wire - in Monteverde.

"It was breathtaking," Weiner said, also in an e-mail interview.

Living with local families also gives the students opportunities to learn the real culture.

Every morning, Weiner eats breakfast that her host mom prepares.

"I enjoy tropical fruits and a good Costa Rican coffee before I go to class," Weiner said.

The program started last year, when 13 students experienced a "fantastic time," Cloutier-Davis said.

The experience in Costa Rica already has had an effect on Weiner's future. She has decided to stay a year longer to help establish volunteer programs in Heredia.

"I'm amazed by the beauty of the country and the friendliness of the people," Weiner said. "It is a dream."

Masten loves life in Costa Rica.

"It is a beautiful country with wonderful, giving people," Masten said. "I am getting what I expected and much, much more."

The students left the United States on Jan. 18 and, with the exception of Weiner, plan to come back in May.

During 15 weeks of the program, Cloutier-Davis hopes the students have grown both personally and academically.

Cloutier-Davis, who has put together five international trips in her six years at the university, is organizing one to Guatemala for J-Term 2010.

Interested student must apply by the end of September.

"The students always come back with a different way of looking at the world, at themselves and their future potentiality," she said.

Major problems still abound

When I read the headline about the new majors and minors offered at Lindenwood for the new school year, I was optimistic. Upon reading the article, my disappointment returned. Lindenwood still doesn't offer a German major.

I found it odd considering the amount of German history in St. Charles. In 1824, Gottfried Duden came to St. Charles and wrote a book about his experience. Upon his return to Germany, he published it, influencing many Germans to immigrate to the area in the 1830s.

If you walk down historic Jefferson Street, the fifth house on the right was built for Christian Bode, who owned the St. Charles Demokrat, a newspaper that was published in German. Even Mary Sibley wrote of teaching local German children. I would have thought that in all this time, Lindenwood would already have a German major, or at least a minor.

But is there really a need for a major in German at Lindenwood? I believe so.

According to the National Geographic Atlas of The World, 185 million people speak German worldwide. For those who think that Chinese is now the most important foreign language to learn, according to the CIA World Fact book, the German economy is the largest in Europe.

Lindenwood also needs a German major because many other universities in Missouri, such as UMSL, SLU, Mizzou and Washington University, offer majors and minors in German. If Lindenwood is to compete with these surrounding schools, it would be logical to offer a German major, especially when Lindenwood offers majors in Spanish and French.

But wait, we can't have a German major, not yet, or rather, noch nicht. I spoke with Dr. Bell, Lindenwood professor of English and German, about some of the problems preventing a German major. One of the biggest obstacles may be a lack of interest from students. Nationwide, the interest in a German major has lagged behind Spanish and French.

One of the reasons for this lack of interest may be that German is perceived as harder to learn than French or Spanish. I can personally attest that this is incorrect. I have taken only a semester and a half of German, and I am already able to converse with Matthias, my roommate from Cologne, Germany. In fact, German may be easier to learn because both German and English come from the same Germanic language family.

Another obstacle is the lack of faculty teaching German. Dr. Bell, who has an undergraduate degree in German and has lived in Germany for three years, actually has his doctorate degree in English. With Dr. Bell being the only German professor, there would need to be at least one other professor teaching German.

Even though Lindenwood does not offer a major or minor in German, they do offer courses such as German 101, 102, 201, 202, 311 and 312. All of these courses are taught by the knowledgeable and funny Dr. Bell. After two years, students have the opportunity to study at the Universität in Bochum for one or two semesters. Lindenwood also has many German-speaking students, including one who writes for The Legacy, Cindy Mühlbacher. If there is going to be a German major or minor, there must be a need for it. This would require more students showing interest in the subject. I say this because many people think German is too hard to learn, or sounds gross, or isn't romantic. I can tell you that like any other foreign language, how much you learn is directly connected to how much you try.

I encourage you to try German if you haven't already fulfilled the two-year foreign language requirement, or even if you have. I think you will like the Duetsch a lot more than you expect. For more information, contact Dr. Bell at 636-949-4401. Liebe Grüße, Zak.

How to save on spring break

The entire week of spring break often includes the crazy drunken nights and awesome afternoons with friends at the beach. Nevertheless, most of us also hear the "I'm completely broke" remark when it comes to going out during those days. Spring Break seems destined to leave college students in personal economic depression.

This does not have to be the case. By now, most students have travel arrangements planned and await the incredibly stress-free week with anticipation. However, the expenses are often like those assignments that are given one month in advance: they aren't considered until we find we are already short on time.

There are three money-saving tips that I find particularly useful and quite relevant to Spring Break vacations. Limit the number of credit cards that you take, divide the money for the trip per day, and divide the expenses between friends and family.

Having more than one or two necessary credit cards on vacation is like preparing to spend or lose money. Credit cards pose a problem because they have a large limit, not to mention the ease at which they are lost or stolen. You may feel inclined to pay with these cards because you forget that you are spending money instead of simply swiping a card. Also, using several credit cards means that you can divide the expenses among all of them equally, but it might also be an incentive to spend more than you can afford on each one.

Dividing the expenses for the trip into money allotted for each day helps keep you on a budget. During the first day or two, if you realize that your money was spent quickly, reevaluate your expenses and divide them into necessities and extras. Those extras may include alcohol purchases, cover charges, or souvenirs. These miscellaneous items can clearly be reduced. Try not to be the impulsive shopper that tends to have no clear list of required items.

Divide the expenses between friends and family, even those expenses that aren't necessities. For example, if at the club you decide that your group of friends—and possibly, their friends—deserve a round of drinks to celebrate the study-free week, understand that you do not have to buy all the rounds.

As simple as it sounds, each of your friends can take turns and each one can save money. If it is possible, buy groceries and divide the bill. Take turns cooking, and expensive tipping can be avoided.

Finally, keep emergency money in a place where only you know its location and where you are sure not to spend it. We have all heard the stories of not having enough money to get home and forced to resort to the accessibility of our beloved credit cards.

Saving daylight is stressful

After years of simply accepting it in my adolescence, I'm finally starting to question this whole daylight savings thing.

First of all, I dread having to mess with my alarm clock. Merely changing the time turns into this laborious task which usually results in lots of swearing and me digging through my closet searching for the manual. And when I finally managed to move my clock forward this spring it aggravated me that, just like that, an entire hour disappeared. Lying in bed that night unable to sleep, knowing that I had to be up early, daylight savings really aggravated me. What's the point of it?

Many say it's for farmers or it was implemented during World War II to help conserve energy. As far as the conservation of energy, a search through the New York Times database brings up many articles arguing both sides.

I'm not against daylight savings time. Like most people, I enjoy the extra hour of daylight during the summer months. I just don't like that twice a year we have to change our clocks. It seems that as soon as my body adjusts to the schedule, it's time to change it again.

Would it be a radical idea to keep daylight savings time year round? Once a year? Businesses and individuals could adjust their schedules based off this set standard time. We shouldn't completely do away with daylight savings, but I think the idea behind it can be adjusted.

BSU hosts Culture and Heritage forum

By Reggie Cunningham
Contributing Writer

The Lindenwood University Black Student Union held their first ever Culture and Heritage Open Forum on February 23 in the Lindenwood Leadership Room.

The object of the event was to discuss topics such as the difference between race and ethnicity, discrimination on campus and international race relations.

"The event was small, yet full of information," said Constance Jones, BSU president.

Approximately 30 people attended.

Students were urged to come share opinions and personal experiences dealing with the different topics, in an effort to spread awareness and knowledge of the subjects discussed.

"It was a real eye-opener and I think it helped people be more aware of how they perceive things," said Shayla Marie, freshman chemistry major.

The event, organized by Charo Richardson, vice-president of the BSU, included a panel consisting of students of different nationalities and ethnic backgrounds.

This served to gain perspectives from as many types of students as possible.

"It provided good insight on how fellow students feel about culture and heritage," said Jones.

Larentz Boyd thought the event was a success.

"It was surprisingly informative and diverse in topic and opinion. It was all over good," said the senior Christian Ministries major, who served as the emcee.

Freshman Jennifer Devonshire, a BSU member and undecided major, feels forums like this should be held more often. "I think it would be a great idea to do the forum once a semester each school year with different, interesting topics that are current to that year," said Devonshire.

The BSU is now planning their "BSU vs. St. Louis Police Dept." basketball game.

The event was a success last year, and Jones said she would like for it to be a "yearly event."

Also, St. Louis rapper Nelly will be visiting LU during a date TBA in April to present the Lindenwood BSU scholarship to two high school students from the St. Louis metropolitan area.

Next year will be the first for this new BSU scholarship.

Loans

If Obama's proposal passes, students "won't have to choose a lender. They will be forced to use the Department of Education as their lender."

Some worry the proposal could lead to the failure of private loan companies, such as Sallie Mae, that count on the subsidy received from the government to generate revenue.

Immediately after the proposal was announced, for instance, shares of Sallie Mae fell 42 percent.

Kevin Bruns, a spokesman for the group America's Student Loan Providers, agreed that the move could be detrimental to companies that provide student loans.

"The subsidized program has given families uninterrupted access to loans and has been a source of stability," Bruns said. "But now is not the time to panic."

Some believe switching the loan process to direct loans will make lending easier and more accessible for students, but Bode said she wasn't sure how the change would affect Lindenwood students.

"It could make lending more accessible to students who have had difficulty obtaining access to loans in the past, but Lindenwood students have not had this issue," she said.

However, she said, changes in the institutional process would be likely.

"There will be steps we have to take before the actual transition," Bode said. "We don't know if it will be easier or harder than the current process, since we haven't done it before."

In addition to expanding the FDSL, Obama's proposal would increase funding for federal Pell Grants. Kan-trowitz said the maximum Pell Grant award would jump to $5,550 for the 2010-2011 school year. The 2008-2009 school year's maximum award is $4,731.

Part of this increased funding would come from the $4 billion a year Obama plans on saving from switching to direct lending, Kantrowitz said.

"Students are pressured by the effects of college tuition inflation rates," he said. "Expanded funding for Pell Grants would allow the program to keep pace with inflation."

Dean

"I want all of our students to take advantage of our plans to be involved with the professional touring companies Lindenwood will continue to attract," Walsh said.

He said of his new role: "It is a very active position with daily challenges regarding academic and production decisions, solving problems with both students and faculty, while thinking on your feet."

Walsh will soon be consumed by the many duties and daily tasks of being a dean.

He said he wants to keep students at the top of his list.

"Regardless of what else is going on, I want students to know that they can come talk to me anytime with concerns, hopes and dreams and receive priority treatment."

After long and strenuous ice hockey seasons, the men claimed their first American Collegiate Hockey Association (ACHA) championship in team history, and the women won their second title in a row.

The men were ranked first nearly all season and proved that it was not a fluke. In the quarterfinal game against the Penn State Berks, the Lions scored early and often, ending the first period 5-1.

But that wasn't the main story.

The game was postponed because of a carbon monoxide leak in the arena.

Seven players were sent to the hospital, treated and released.

The postponement forced the Lions to play five games in five days leading into the championship game.

"I think it was tough because we did not get that day off, but at the same time we kept playing through," Head Coach Derek Schaub said.

"It helped with our momentum because we did not cool off."

But the Lions resumed play the next day and won 14-1.

Lindenwood proved too much for Liberty University in the semifinal match, defeating them 5-1.

The finals featured a rematch of the 2008 championship game against rival Illinois. The Lions had won four straight games against the Fighting Illini this season.

"Many people asked who I would want to play in the finals. It meant a little more that it was Illinois, but to me it really didn't matter.

We just wanted the win," Schaub said.

There was no score until Carson Hamill scored in the second, but Illinois quickly answered to knot it up 1-1. The Lions scored two more before the end of the second period and Steve Balint scored the fourth and final goal to cap it off, solidifying their first national championship.

The women clinched their championship March 15, ending with an 18-game winning streak.

In the ACHA quarterfinals they trailed fourth-ranked Massachusetts but took them into double overtime and defeated them on an Alexandra Johansson game-winner.

This sent the Lady Lions into a second-round match up against University of Min-

This time Lindenwood came from a 2-0 deficit to win it triple overtime and send them to the finals against Robert Morris.

It was a close game all the way to the end. Robert Morris got on the board first with a goal in the third, but it was quickly answered with a Mandy Dion goal.

With time running out in regulation, Lisa Moreau snuck a goal into the net, crowning the Lady Lions ACHA Champions for the second year in a row.

Moreau's game-winning goal solidified her mark as the MVP of the tournament.

"The fact that this is a team with a lot of new faces makes it really special," Head Coach Vince O'Mara said.

"To come back three separate times speaks volumes for this team.

"I have never coached a team that could do something like this."

Lady Lions look to rebound

By Micah Woodard
Sports Editor

Hampered by injuries and inconsistent clutch hitting, the Lady Lions look to warm up with the weather and rebound from a sub par start.

Lindenwood began the year with an 8-9 mark going into conference play, which starts today. Although the team's batting average is up, the Lady Lions have failed to convert with runners in scoring position, Head Coach Don Loberg said.

"It's frustrating that we can't get the runners scored," he said.

Freshman outfielder Kayla Murphy agreed.

"We have so much more potential than we're showing," she said, adding that playing more games should help improve the scoring woes.

Feb. 27 was a disheartening day for the Lady Lions, as injuries benched two starters, sophomore Chelsea Landeck and freshman shortstop Jessica Long.

Landeck, a defensive force at catcher, broke two fingers while attempting a bunt in a 3-2 victory over ninth-ranked Olivet Nazarene University.

"Defensively, we've lost a lot with her," Loberg said.

The injury bug struck again later that same day when Long broke her nose against Indiana Tech on a hard-hit ground ball. She was hitting .429 and led the team in homers.

Murphy misses Long's contribution.

"It kind of sucks that she's not playing," she said.

Completing games also has been problematic. The team has played close games, but the pitching has been giving out near the end, Loberg said.

"We just can't hold onto the lead," he said.

Indeed, five of their nine losses have been by two runs or less.

Despite the setbacks, the Lady Lions have seen many positives this season.

Fresh out of high school, Murphy has shined in the outfield. She is batting .432 and leads the team in runs scored.

"I always strive to get better," she said. "I'm very hard on myself."

Freshman pitcher Rebecca Peddicord has emerged as the team's ace, posting a 6-2 record with a team-leading 2.41 ERA and a K/9 of 8.38.

Lindenwood also has been solid defensively, averaging only 1.3 errors per game.

The Lady Lions begin conference play with a doubleheader against Benedictine University.

Games are scheduled at 3 and 5 p.m. at Lou Brock Sports Complex.

Loberg said he still expects the squad to win the Heart of America Athletic Conference (HAAC).

"When they do play well, we beat teams pretty handily," he said. "So we'll see what happens."

My Take

Thanks ... but no thanks

They say that imitation is the highest form of flattery, but after learning the reason behind Lindenwood's resignation from the Central Plains Women's Lacrosse League (CPWLL), I must disagree.

Fear is the highest form of flattery in sports.

Lindenwood dominated the CPWLL in 2007 and 2008, going undefeated in conference play and winning the conference championship – and an automatic bid to the national tournament – both years.

That's the nice way of putting it. In reality, the Lady Lions simply obliterated the lackluster competition.

Lindenwood outscored its opponents 235-25 in 13 conference contests, winning by an average score of about 18-2.

Apparently the rest of the league just got tired of losing to them.

After the 2008 season, CPWLL member Washington University "drafted a resolution that would dissolve the league if Lindenwood refused to leave," according to the league Web site.

The rest of the conference unanimously agreed with the proposal, and the Lady Lions withdrew from the CPWLL on July 11 – with one stipulation.

The deal forced the conference to renounce its automatic bid to the Women's Division Intercollegiate Associates (WDIA) tournament for the next two years.

No one seemed to be bothered.

Why wouldn't losing your only chance to go to the national tournament faze you? According to the article, CPWLL President Tom Kuzmic "believed that no one from our league would have qualified for the tournament anyway, with Lindenwood still in the league."

Micah Woodard
Sports Editor

Wow ... getting kicked out of a conference because you were too good. Now that's respect.

I can understand the position of Wash U. and the rest of the league, but it certainly doesn't make them look good.

Ironically, this whole ordeal gave Lindenwood even more legitimacy in the lacrosse world.

The Lady Lions are definitely better off, though. Lindenwood now contends in the Women's Collegiate Lacrosse League (WCLL), a more competitive conference.

They are competing alongside other top schools such as Pittsburgh, Michigan and Michigan State, all of which qualified for the national tournament last season, according to Lacrosse Magazine.

No longer guaranteed a spot in the WDIA tournament every year, the Lady Lions will have to step up their game.

Early results suggest they will, as they defeated their first two opponents in their new conference by scores of 13-1 and 14-3.

Perhaps Lindenwood will provide another conference with a reason to fear.

Synchro enjoys first-year success

By Aisha Foster
Staff Reporter

Lindenwood synchronized swimming has had great success in its first season, the latest a second-place finish at regional competition March 7 at Ohio State University.

According to the athletics Web site, the Lady Lions scored 82 points to the host Buckeyes' 103, finishing ahead of Carleton, Michigan, Minnesota, Miami (Ohio) and Colorado State.

Other highlights for the team included winning the A technical event and C figure. Devah Leenheer was second in solo competition, and Leenheer and Mikayla Francese were second in duet.

Lori Eaton, current U.S. National Team coach and head coach of the Lady Lions, said the experience has been amazing thus far.

"I am so happy and proud of the Lindenwood synchronized swimming team and the name we have made for ourselves in the synchro community. We have proven that a first year team can be competitive," she said.

The team competes in NCAA divisions I, II and III against a variety of schools, such as Ohio State, Stanford, Richmond and Incarnate Word.

LU will compete in a field of about 25 schools at the Collegiate National Championship this weekend, March 26-28, aiming to finish in the top five.

"Bringing 12 different people together to form a team is a challenge, but these 12 have so much determination, honesty and respect that they were able to gel beautifully," said Eaton.

The team practices in the water Monday through Friday from 1-3 p.m., and has land workouts, weightlifting, sport psych, nutrition, stretch and flexibility drills. Next year Eaton plans to add dance to their training.

The swimmers also set academic goals at the beginning of the season – Eaton said they wanted to have the highest GPA in the aquatics department.

"Last fall semester the synchro team had the highest GPA out of all the sports at Lindenwood. I was very proud of them," she said.

Their record so far is 13 wins and four seconds. Eaton said judges, spectators and even competitors at meets have complimented LU and urged keeping up the great work.

"Others are inspired by us," she said.

The coach said she plans to recruit strong, motivated, talented student-athletes who maintain a high GPA to build a program that people respect.

Wrestlers re-repeat, win 3rd straight title

By Andrew Tessmer
Staff Reporter

When the Lions wrestlers won their third straight 2009 NAIA wrestling championship March 5-7 in Oklahoma City, their coach saw it as more than just a team title.

"This is not just an LU wrestling national championship," said Head Coach Joe Parisi. "This is a Lindenwood University national championship."

The team breezed to the title with strong showings by the entire team.

Top performances came from seniors Matt Cauley (174), Ray Stephens (133) and junior Jeremy Powell (157), all national champions in their weight classes.

"We have a recipe here that is conducive for success," Parisi said.

Powell, the underdog in his final bout, was close to a pin but instead scored a 5-1 decision. Cauley and Stephens easily disposed of their competition.

Stephens allowed his opponent only escape points, winning 19-9, while Cauley pinned his rival at 2:50 in the first round.

Cauley, defending champion from 2008 and an All-American, won the prestigious Gorriarian Award for outstanding wrestler of the year. He also was named NAIA-NWCA wrestler of the year at the tournament.

In addition to the athletes' accomplishments, Parisi was named "Coach of the Year" for the third time by the NAIA.

The win at the national championships gave Parisi his fifth national title in his 10-year tenure as Lions head coach.

The team also had support from All-American runners-up Sam Schmitz (149) and John Murray (165).

LU's other All-Americans are Chris Chionuma (165), Jon Lloyd (133) and Ryan Moyer (149), who each took fifth place in their weight classes, contributing valuable points to the team total of 167.

"I am so proud of the young men who continued the tradition of LU athletics," said Parisi.

Lindenwood defeated its nearest opponent – Southern Oregon finished with 125.5 points – by a 41.5-point margin in claiming the third successive NAIA national title.

Chris Cluess shares tricks of the TV trade

T.J. Grigone
Staff Writer

Award winning comedy writer Chris Cluess sat with Lindenwood students Friday, March 13, and Saturday, March 14 to discuss his career in television and comedy in general.

Cluess, who won an Emmy in 1981 for his work on Second City TV, provided many laughs as he vividly delved into his history of comedy writing. One anecdote involved chasing Dan Aykroyd through busy New York City in a cab. This led to a meeting with the notorious SNL alum which, according to Cluess, was his gateway into the humor business. Since then, Cluess has worked on television shows such as Cheers, Night Court, and MadTV.

Out of the near 35 years Cluess has worked in television, he says Night Court was his best overall experience. "We were there the first two years as writers," said Cluess. "We left for five and came back. We took the show over in its eighth season and everybody thought it would be its last season. We thought we were going to close it down. We did such a good job it got picked up for a ninth season. We took a place that was really and truly tired of doing this work and we energized it. We had a wonderful, wonderful time. It was a great show."

Chris Cluess is still actively working in television, as he recently wrote an episode of The Simpsons. An iconic show, The Simpsons has a reputation of having "done it all" already.

"The way the Simpsons works is when you write an episode on the show you have to pitch five ideas," said Cluess. "Al Jean, the show writer, an old friend of mine, told me, 'you're gonna come in and pitch five things we've already done, so don't worry about that.'" Cluess, who admits a bit of unfamiliarity with The Simpsons, didn't worry.

"I was a little Simpsons ignorant," said Cluess. "I love the show, but I haven't watched it over the years that much. Whenever I see it I think it's fantastic and great, but for some reason it never clicked with me. So I actually had to go out and rent a couple seasons of the show and look to get the rhythm down and get the characters. I knew who they were but I had to get the intricacies of the characters. I went in the room, I pitched five ideas and there were four that they had never done. And that's only because I was ignorant. Ignorance pays. Ignorance is bliss."

Currently, Cluess is working on a comedic web series for www.machinima.com. Machinima is a cutting-edge way of creating short films using video game footage. Cluess' series, based off The Sims 3, is a comedy about a dog plotting the demise of his master's family. Speaking on the future of television on the web, Cluess is intrigued by the "doability" of producing a show for the internet. "You're able to produce that episode in five days," he said.

Lindenwood professor and artist in residence Rift Fournier played an integral part in bringing Cluess to visit Lindenwood. "Chris Cluess has been a good friend of mine for 25 years," said Fournier. "We met at the 1985 strike... He's so funny," he added. "He sees the world with this cockeyed look. He's also smart. He can talk about this in an experiential as opposed to an academic way... He's a really cool guy. There's nothing pretentious or Hollywood about him."

Cluess has spoken at other universities such as NYU, American, and Northwestern. Lindenwood, he said, was "interesting because most of those places are on the coast and there was a little bit of a different vibe... I think some people come and they're not sure what they're going to get - not sure what they're going to see or hear. And the last thing I want to do is come in here and be a wise guy, but sometimes you have to because you have to keep their attention somehow, and then hopefully you find your way through it. I think it went very successfully."

Being a successful television writer, Chris Cluess enjoys sharing his knowledge and experiences with students. "I like to do this very much," he said. "I like to give back... It's also an ego boost for me," Cluess added. "I mean, people are willing to look at my stuff and listen to me talk. How many people get that opportunity?"

"I pitched five ideas, and there were four that they had never done."
