Lindenwood Teams Acquire Home Court Advantage

by Mary Halleemann
LindenWorld Writer

Lindenwood's basketball and volleyball teams now have a place to call home. The school recently acquired the Bridgeton Sports Complex, which is about two and a half miles from campus.

The facility is being leased for two years with an option for a third year, according to Stephen Crotz, athletic director. It is being used for games and practices.

The building interior consists of a large floor, seating, lockers, restrooms, and a substantial storage area. The two basketball hoops are from the Arena and the floor was acquired from Kiel Auditorium.

"We lucked into a great deal," said Crotz. "We were looking for a floor, and Kiel was looking to get rid of theirs."

Bleachers in the complex seat about 300 people. After adding individual seats, capacity is expected to increase to 500, according to Crotz.

Crotz said the main benefits of the complex are its convenience and consistency. Lindenwood athletes had always practiced at local high schools in the past.

"It was a scheduling nightmare," said Crotz. "The other schools had access to prime times, so we often practiced late in the evening. Now, we're usually finished by 8:30, which allows the athletes more opportunities to become involved in campus activities."

The complex also provides the athletes with the advantage of becoming accustomed to playing on a "home court."

In the future, the building is planned to be a practice area for track and field indoor events. Crotz plans to also hold extracurricular events, such as dances in the complex.

Currently, Lindenwood is the only group using the complex. In the future, the college is considering subleasing to other groups like McDonnell Douglas for a corporate fitness program.

To complement the complex, Lindenwood is rehabilitating the equestrian area adjacent to the field house. This area will be a practice area for the wrestling team, cheerleaders, and dance squad, according to Crotz. It will contain an indoor track, expanded weight room, and fitness area, and will be open to all students. It is planned to be constructed in two-three years.

Learning Good Study Skills: The Key to Success

by Elizabeth O'Driscoll
LindenWorld Writer

"Just study harder." At one point in your career as a student, you've heard this. "Where There's a Will, There's an A," is a program that we constantly hear about in magazines, tabloids, and paid commercial endorsements featuring celebrities and parents. "Where There's a Will, There's an A" was designed by Claude W. Olney to help students get better grades. The program is offered at three levels: grade school, high school, and college.

The program begins reviewing the attitude you have toward education, professors, courses, and textbooks. Guidelines are given for each category.

For example, choose the professors over the courses. Olney claims that "a poor instructor can ruin a good course" and "an excellent instructor can make any course interesting and fun." Meet with prospective professors, sit in on their classes (if possible), and talk to other students about the instructor.

Another area featured in the program is the left and right brain functions. A right brained person is more artistic, musical, innovative, imaginative, political, and theatrical. The left brained person tends to be more scientific, logical, analytical, and mathematically inclined. Tips that Olney includes are:

- never miss class
- always do extra credit work (it isn't really "extra" credit if it's offered to the whole class).
- register early (courses with favorable professors fill up fast)
- study actively, not passively
- memory skills
- writing skills
- skills for educated guessing

The tapes are slow and boring, but the tips are good. The skills listed above consist of two-three pages of examples and ideas.

The "insight" Olney expresses is interesting. Some of the tips offered are old, but we forget to use them. In some respects, the program is a refresher course.

The program includes a book outlining each tip and category with either cassette tapes or video tapes. The program isn't cheap and the cost varies depending upon which tape is purchased. The cost is between 60 and 90 dollars. A copy of the tape is available at the St. Charles public library in the video section.

Lindenwood Begins Early College Start Program

by Staff Writer

Lindenwood will begin a program that offers college credit to high school seniors. The Early College Start Program serves as an educational partnership with Lindenwood and selected area high schools.

College credit can be earned for classes taught in high school whose educators have "adjunct instructor" status at Lindenwood.

Another option for students is to attend classes on campus. These students can earn up to nine credit hours per semester in classes like English, biology, psychology, foreign language, and math. Courses that are considered for credit may differ among high schools.

"We want to assist high schools in establishing dual enrollment programs, so students can get a head-start on college," said Dr. Larry Doyle, professor of education.

Lindenwood will provide tuition assistance to all high school students involved in the Early College Start Program. Participating students will receive an official transcript stating the courses and credits awarded that will apply toward a degree at Lindenwood. Credit transferability depends on the receiving institution.

Visit to London Planned over Christmas Break

by Staff Writer

The Division of Management is offering students the opportunity to study international business first-hand. A trip to London over Christmas break is being planned.

The trip costs 1200 dollars, which includes round-trip airfare, airport tax and transfers, all meals and lodging at Regent's College, London Travelcard for unlimited travel by bus and underground in London, and admission to all tours and presentations.

The group will leave January 3 and return January 11. It is possible to earn three credit hours for the trip.

Some things planned include tours of Harrod's, Lloyd's of London, the Bank of England, and the London Times. There will also be plenty of spare time planned for other sightseeing.

OPINION

Dodging the Draft: A Real Campaign Issue?

by John Samuel Tieman
Faculty Contributor

The philosopher John Dewey once said in effect that thought which does not guide action is incomplete. But the reverse is also true: action that does not lead to reflection is surely incomplete. If nothing else, this election illustrates how little America has reflected upon the Vietnam War.

George Bush has placed a lot of his political chips on the bet that the draft issue will resonate among the electorate. I bet he's mostly wrong. In any case, I am reasonably sure the he misunderstands the way it plays among the Baby Boomers. Ironically, Republican strategists even misunderstand most Vietnam vets. Here's an illustration--

I was struck by Marilyn Quayle's statement at the Republican convention, "We didn't all dodge the draft!" I agree. In fact, I suppose I'm one of the people she addressed. At age 19, I dropped out of Webster College, and I volunteered in 1969 for the Army. The Regular Army. Not the Guard. The distinction was important in those days. But Mrs. Quayle doesn't get it.

While I am a combat veteran, I hesitate to add that I did nothing either heroic or noteworthy. In fact, I confess to remembering my service both in the States and in Vietnam with more sadness and sentimentality than horror.

I remember our armorer, Ollie. I remember how we sat in a bunker one night in 1970. Just after the Cambodian Invasion. We knew the war was lost. And we knew we were doing something terribly wrong. Together, we shared a dependency not uncommon in our unit then. You see, Ollie was a volunteer too, as were many of the men in my unit. Neither he nor I had dodged the draft--but we sure wished we had.

I'm a historian now. Republican politicking on the draft involves revisionist history.

There's nothing inherently wrong with being a revisionist, really. But there is something wrong with skewing facts in such a way as to distort history. And to make history self-serving. If nothing else, skewing history in this manner is not very reflective, in the sense that neither Mrs Quayle's nor President Bush's accusations reflect a true history, this largely because they are not being reflective in the sense of being thoughtful.

Depending on who you deem to be in the Vietnam generation--for argument's sake, I am presuming everyone between 40 and 50--43.5 percent of the men of this generation avoided service altogether.

These numbers include Newt Gingrich, Dick Cheney, and a son of President Bush. Of males ages 40-50, perhaps as many as 15 out of 16 are alive today because they found some way to avoid combat.

Granted that some had serious health problems in the 60s and 70s. Beyond that, however, it is ironic that many avoided combat service volunteering. In fact, 70 percent of all Vietnam vets were volunteers. For the most part, we, I, volunteered for noncombatant jobs. The safest route was to avoid active duty altogether by joining the Reserve or the National Guard. And no one--certainly no one who is honest about the way it was in those days--is going to blame Dan Quayle for not wanting to die in what was an unpopular, unjust war. But to call it a heroic choice is to do as much violence to history as we did to Southeast Asia.

When I was in basic training at Fort Polk, Louisiana, a company of National Guard trainees drove past us one day. The "NGs", as we called them jeered at us for being suckers. They had the newest equipment. They were riding as we marched. And we were the suckers. We knew it then, and we know it now.

Years later, I compared a list of war dead to my basic training yearbook. I stopped at the letter H. I wanted to know no more. I doubt that those guys who jeered us that day have such melancholy about their choice.

And I don't blame them for their choice. In fact, I envy people like Dan Quayle. I only wish that back then I had his god sense and his great connections.

I ended up in the Fourth Infantry Division. I had lousy duty in dangerous places, but I didn't die. And that's the point. We all did what we could to stay alive. There was no moralizing or any high-handedness involved. If there was any way to get out, you got out. You'd join the Guard, for example.

I don't fault anyone, the Dan Quayles of the world included, for decisions they made back then. But to say it was somehow high minded is a little silly. It distorts the history of a war many people opposed for reasons that were truly laudatory. Many protestors were considerably more high minded than many soldiers.

So, you want fact, here's fact. Draft dodging was everywhere. And that's not a bad thing. It was pretty smart, as events turned out. Such is history.

A Good HERO is Hard to Find

by Alisa Baumer
Entertainment Editor

It seems nowadays we hear a lot about people who risk their lives to be a hero. Well, we can find one very unlikely hero in the film "HERO" starring Dustin Hoffman, Geena Davis, and Andy Garcia.

Bernie LaPlante (Hoffman) is the unlikely hero of this film. He is a petty criminal who, on one rainy night while trying to get to see his son, rescues 54 people from a plane that crashed into a bridge Bernie was trying to get across.

One of the passengers he rescues is Gale Galey (Davis), a TV reporter who just received the "Silver Mike" Award for "excellence in reporting the truth." Gale, in search of the perfect story, embarks on a media crusade to find the "Angel of Flight 104." A reward of one million dollars is given to the person who fits the shoe that was found at the crash site.

In walks John Bubber (Garcia), a homeless man who picked up Bernie while he was hitchhiking. Bubber, who has the matching shoe (because Bernie left it in the car) and knows the story of the crash, comes forward as the hero. While Bubber receives the glory, Bernie is in jail.

Eventually, Bernie is released and tries to find Bubber, who is adored by all and loved by Gale. Bernie and Gale finally meet, when she confronts him about some stolen credit cards of hers found in his possession. Both come to the rescue of Bubber who threatens to jump off of the hotel building that has become his home. Bernie saves Bubber from jumping and Bubber saves Bernie when he slips off the ledge. Bubber remains the "hero" to all, while Bernie becomes the "hero" to his son.

The entire cast was a delight. Dustin Hoffman was great as the clever two-bit Bernie. Geena Davis was fantastic as the hard-nosed reporter with a soft heart and Andy Garcia was wonderful as the "hero" with a heart of gold. There was also some fine performances by Chevy Chase, as Gale's boss and by Tom Arnold, as the bar owner friend of Bernie's.

I really recommend "HERO." It is a fun and heartwarming film that shows there is a "hero" in all of us.

Lion Gridders Will Compete in New Football Conference

by Staff Writer

October 21, 1992 St. Charles, Mo.--Lindenwood College, currently a football independent, has joined a new football conference called the Mid-States Football Association. The association will be aligned and certified as an NAIA Division II football conference, effective with the 1994 football season.

Eleven NAIA member institutions that are currently independents have signed an agreement to form the association, which will have a Midwest League and a Mideast League. Lindenwood will compete in the Midwest League along with Findlay (Ohio), Olivet Nazarene (Ill.), St. Xavier (Ill.), (Ohio), Urbana (Ohio), and Westminster (Pa.). A 12th school, Mount St. Joseph (Ohio) will be invited to join the association as a member of the Mideast League.

"We are very pleased to join this group of top quality colleges which are known for their commitment to academics, as well as athletics," said Dennis C. Spellmann, president of Lindenwood College. "It's essential to maintain the proper balance between academics and athletics, and these colleges, like Lindenwood, share that goal."

Beginning in 1994, each team will schedule all other league members, and a minimum of two "crossover" games versus teams from the association's other league. As a certified football conference, the champion of each league would qualify for the NAIA Division II Football Playoffs, should league champions meet playoff qualification criteria.

"We're very excited about becoming part of this conference. This affiliation will give us more consistency in terms of scheduling," said Jeff Driskill, head football coach for the Lindenwood.

Lindenwood Athletic Director Steve Crotz also welcomed the affiliation. He said, "Being part of the MSFA will help us in terms of recruitment, and increase our chances of advancing to post-season play. We'll also gain more national exposure in three major media markets for Lindenwood's academic and athletic achieve-

Students TAP into Their Talents

by Staff Writer

Lindenwood is taking steps to give its students and new graduates an edge. The Talent Accomplishment Profile (TAP) program is a new approach to help students "tap" into their talents and become more well-rounded graduates.

"TAP is a pro-active approach to student development and career placement," said Brian Watkins, director of TAP advising. "There are no negatives, just positives."

Brian's father, Ed Watkins, a St. Charles businessman, who also works as a consultant for Lindenwood, developed the TAP program. Along with Sheryl Guffey, director of student services, he oversees the program. Lynnette Basler and Pat Marsh assist with the program also.

There are three basic motives behind the TAP program: to increase involvement in on-campus activities, to increase involvement in off-campus activities in the student's chosen field, and to increase vocational awareness.

After students complete a TAP profile, the college then develops a talent transcript for students to send out with their resumes. These transcripts will help give employers a three-dimensional view of the student as a prospective employee.

Lindenwood implemented TAP last spring. At that time, it was on an experimental basis with 165 students filling out the profile information sheets in dorm meetings.

Now that the program is gearing up, 70 percent of all residential students are signed up, and 85 percent of seniors have signed up for Senior Countdown Seminars.

These seminars help seniors get a feel for how networking can help them and how they can get the edge on placement by setting themselves apart from graduates of other Seniors also take the Holland Self Directed Search to help them make career choices. The search targets occupational personality types.

Future TAP plans include compiling a catalog of students to keep on file so that prospective employers will be able to access the information.

Reporting Class Conducts Election Survey

by Tammy Tucker
LindenWorld Editor

The Advanced Reporting class is taking advantage of the "Decision '92" hoopla. The class conducted a poll on Oct. 19 as a class project.

The purpose of the survey was to determine how some Lindenwood students felt about the presidential candidates. 129 females and 105 males responded.

The class found that if the presidential election were held that day, Clinton/Gore would have been the choice among the students. Following are the results of the survey:

Bush/Quayle	67 votes
Clinton/Gore	92 votes
Perot/Stockdale	42 votes
Marrou/Lord	1 vote
Undecided	61 votes
Other	4 votes

Most students surveyed said they believed the economy was the most important issue in the campaign.

ments."

The association has planned its first organizational meeting for April 16, 1993, in Findlay, Ohio to prepare a league constitution/charter and establish operating policies.

Cross Country Achieves Highest Ranking Ever

by Staff Writer

Lindenwood's men's cross country team has achieved its highest ranking ever, as they are currently thirteenth in the nation.

"The men are running incredibly right now," said Coach Gary White. "The chemistry is just right. Barring any injuries, and with the same progression, we could wind up in the top ten."

The men's team has a motto of "We win, we swim." Every time they win a meet, they find the nearest pond and jump into it. The team hopes to continue this tradition the rest of their season.

L.I.N.C.

(Lindenwood Is Nature Conscious)

by Staff Writer

L.I.N.C., otherwise known as "Lindenwood Is Nature Conscious" has had several meetings so far this year. The elected officers are: President, Sonia Mathew, Vice President, Valerie Grey, and secretary, Heather Caudill. L.I.N.C. is sponsoring a variety of recycling efforts on campus. The biggest effort currently is aluminum can recycling. L.I.N.C., along with the International Club and the Girls' Softball team, has made it possible for the campus to have several large, white, plastic containers donated by Pepsi. They are located in most educational buildings and most dorms. The three clubs work together to maintain the project and hope everyone will toss their soda cans in the unmistakable barrels.

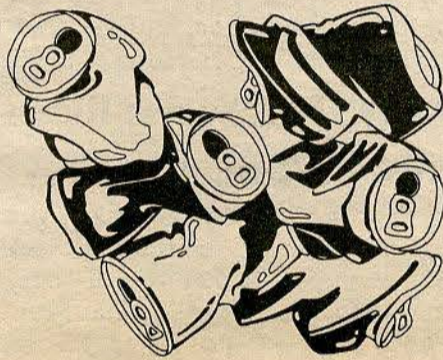

Another project of L.I.N.C.'s is paper recycling. In the Young dock, paper can be deposited into any of three boxes. (To reach this room go to the bottom floor of Young and go right., The paper room is the first door on the left past the exit sign.) Paper-only trash cans are located in the student post office and in the copy room in Roemer. L.I.N.C. encourages everyone to separate paper from other waste because paper recycling can save thousands of trees a year.

L.I.N.C. is sponsoring old phone book recycling until October 23. Anyone wanting to rid himself of cumbersome and useless phone books should take them to the Young paper room before 3:00 Friday.

Trailer inhabitants can get help recycling from L.I.N.C. L.I.N.C. is providing garbage bags for aluminum cans and will pick up full bags on a regular basis. Anyone in a trailer willing to recycle should see Sonia Mathew or Ann Canale (L.I.N.C. faculty advisor).

On Saturday, October 24, L.I.N.C. and Circle K are doing a highway clean up. Circle K adopted part of Highway 94 as a service project and L.I.N.C. is joining in the effort to clean up the highway.

L.I.N.C. meetings are every Wednesday at 9:30 in Butler. New members are always welcome. If interested, please come to a meeting or contact any officer. Other upcoming projects may include a social event as well as an informative speaker discussing ways and benefits of recycling.

Lindenwood Names "Who's Who" Committee Members

Contributed by Mike Mason

Each year Lindenwood is asked to nominate a limited number of Juniors, Seniors and Graduate Students for recognition in Who's Who Among American Universities and Colleges, an annual directory that lists biographies of some of the country's outstanding college students.
