

Lindenwood College

BULLETIN

WINTER

1959

FROM THE PRESIDENT

Americans cherish the hope that education beyond the high school may be available for every boy and girl with the ambition and ability to use it. It is a worthy hope, born of our democratic tradition.

Not all education on this level is of one kind. The liberal arts college must seek students prepared and able to profit from this curriculum, else it wastes the precious time of teachers and of some of its students. This responsibility for the selection of students will be increasingly significant in the decade before us. We will be faced with increasing numbers of students, an alarming shortage of qualified teachers, and constantly rising costs of education.

Lindenwood College has long sought to enroll students of ability and character. It has required character references to supplement high school transcripts and diplomas. Until 1940, however, any graduate of an accredited high school might apply. Beginning in that year and continuing to 1956, there has been a gradual stiffening of academic entrance requirements. Today those eligible to apply must rank in the upper half of the graduating class in an accredited high school. She must have had certain specified units in English, history, social science, natural science, mathematics, and foreign language, or have made satisfactory scores on the College Board Examinations.

While academic standards for admission were being raised, the college has also sought to establish minimum standards of performance for those who may remain in college. Under "General Information" in the 1947-48 catalog, we find the first mention of elimination of students for failure to do satisfactory class work. In the fall of 1950 the grade point system was put into effect. Since then Probation and Dismissal have been based on grade point ratio. Today a freshman with less than 1.6

grade point average is placed on probation and must bring her grade point average to this point the next summer or be dropped. For sophomores and juniors, the required grade point average is 1.80. For seniors, it is 2.00.

In establishing these standards for admission and for continuance in college, we are not declaring that we are interested only in students who are to become professional scholars. Of course we are interested in superior students. We believe we have the facilities and the faculty to give them superior opportunities. We are also sincerely interested in intelligent young women of average ability who wish to cultivate their minds that they may be effective and competent in home and community. Teachers know their students as friends and are ready to give help and counsel outside the classroom. An excellent counseling program under the Director of Guidance and Placement, and individual help provided by the Dean supplement the efforts of the faculty to lead each student to satisfactory achievement. We regret every failure in this effort. We hope that we shall have few such failures, but there is no kindness to student or patron in allowing students who do not meet these minimum standards to continue in residence here.

There are many values to be realized from life on this college campus. These values are enriched by experience with our student honor system. But values will be impaired in any college community which does not recognize the primary importance of study. The most significant thing that takes place here takes place in the classroom. We are proud of student respect for academic achievement and confident that students and patrons expect us to maintain high scholastic standards.

Three explosions in higher education

DEVEREUX C. JOSEPHS

Chairman of the Board

New York Life Insurance Company

There has never been so much talk about higher education as we have had recently. Newspapers and magazines have been editorializing. The federal government has just enacted a bill which will have important influence on higher education.

There are debates over quantity versus quality. (Of course we need both.) There is discussion of faculty salaries and the raising of standards. There are new demands and pressures. . . .

All of this discussion about education is a good thing. At times it is confusing, but it is not as aimless as it sounds. It is an example of the democratic process. The dust settles often enough to reveal several basic issues. Each of us may have a different idea of which issues are central, but I propose to give you my own conception of those factors which all of us interested in higher education must consider. I am sure you understand that I speak as a result of a national examination.

This nation is confronted by three irresistible forces which must be recognized in all our planning—an explosion (1) of population, (2) of knowledge and (3) into plenitude or, at least, into material sufficiency. These explosions are real, they are powerful and they have a profound effect upon the course of education.

The explosion of population arises from two incontrovertible facts.

First: There were almost twice as many children born in 1955 as there were in 1935, and thus 15 years hence, there will be almost twice as many boys and girls of college age.

Second: There has been a steady growth since the turn of the century in the percentage of youngsters who enter college. In 1900, it was five percent; 1930—twelve-and-a-half percent; and now it is approximately 33 percent. Thus, an even greater percentage of an increased population of youngsters will be continuing their education beyond their high school graduation. The number might triple—it will surely double. . . .

The second explosion is that of knowledge. Most text books age quickly, but never more quickly than they do today. I suppose Latin grammars remain the same and there is little change in the list of irregular French verbs except for the worse, but much that I learned about the physical sciences when I was in college is no longer true. In those days there were no “majors” in the social sciences, so recent is our attention to the problems of group living and human behavior. A decade of change in the mid-twentieth century exceeds 50 years of the last century and many hundreds of years in the Middle Ages.

Not only are the contents of the school books changing, but parents must continue their study in order to understand the changing world around them. And they had better keep up with what is being taught to their children. This explosion of knowledge in all directions affects adults and youth equally.

This article, excerpted with permission, is based on an address Mr. Josephs gave before the Greater Des Moines Chamber of Commerce at the Educational Day Meeting, September 26, 1958. Mr. Josephs, a former president of the Carnegie Corporation of New York, is a member of the board of several corporations, the Metropolitan Museum of Art, the New York Public Library, and The Johns Hopkins University. He is best known to education for his work as Chairman of the President's Committee on Education Beyond the High School.

In addition to all that is new in the physical and social sciences, there is much more to come. We can predict this with certainty for the years ahead. Almost two percent of our gross national product has been put annually into research over the last ten years. This 37 billion dollar investment is irresistibly moving on from test tubes and drawing boards into tryouts and pilot plants and then to factories. New products will flow, new needs will be gratified; and new wants will be stimulated. . . .

The third explosion is that which I have called plenty, or material sufficiency. Throughout history man has lived in the shadow of scarcity. Want and fear of want have been his motivating force. Recently in this country and, to a lesser extent in a few other nations, there is plenty for all. Suddenly there is a surplus of either time or goods or both, according to our choice. All who are willing to work can enjoy a safer and more comfortable life than the wealthiest could in the fictitious "good old days." This is a hitherto untried way of life on a national scale and we will not make a success of it without study and effort. This we have the leisure to do for we have, in a very real sense, manufactured time to spare in our factories as well as material goods.

I am sure that I do not need to suggest any further factors to prove that there will have to be expansion in the educational system in the years to come. The diversity of post-high school education is such that there will be countless reactions to these three explosions. Almost any reaction is better than none at all. Judging, however, from the amount of discussion around the country, there is no need to fear passive attitudes. At this moment attention to educational problems has been stimulated by the realization that we are being challenged by the Communists in the very area in which we thought we were paramount. . . .

WHAT THE COLLEGE CAN DO

Let us now look briefly at how the college and universities can meet those three explosive forces—population, knowledge and sufficiency.

They can provide opportunity for the growing number of youngsters who will seek training beyond their high school graduation. Fortunately travel facilities are more available, and many students can live at home. These are important elements in reducing the cost of higher education and thus making it available to more of our youth.

With the explosion of knowledge must come more education and training for our young people. The jobs which they will fill in the future, the careers they wish to follow, or the professions they will enter will require much more training and education than ever before. When the institution is located in one of our towns or cities it is often possible to provide youngsters who must be at a job with the chance to earn a degree or credits after working hours. In fact, it must do this if our young people are to have full opportunity to take advantage of the changes and bright paths that lie ahead.

And finally, in the explosion into material sufficiency, there comes a surplus of time, and the chance for all of us to grow in intellectual stature throughout our lives. A good college or university can provide the doors through which the adult population in its community can enter a richer life to fill its leisure hours. Figures which were supplied the President's Committee on Education Beyond the High School indicated that more than 50 million adults in this country are taking some form of organized schooling every year. . . . Now let me turn from the opportunity which the college offers to the responsibility and, perhaps, the obligation of the community which derives the benefit.

THE COMMUNITY'S RESPONSIBILITIES

Education in this country is the responsibility of the citizens. . . . In a democratic society we tax ourselves for what we decide is the proper amount to spend on public education. As voluntary contributors we also provide support for private colleges and universities. How much we pay is important. We can buy our education in the bargain basement along with seconds and the articles which have gone out of style, or we can make purchases of quality and fresh design. Surely we will get no more than we pay for. I hope this country will never depart from the tradition of education as a local and individual matter. I hope we will never turn to the elite system of education, which is the system used in most of the rest of the world. England and Europe are no exceptions. Under that system, the choice is made at about the age of 12 as to whether an individual is to be educated for a profitable career or a distinguished profession or whether he merely is to be trained for an occupation in the individual process. . . .

The American system is more flexible and more merciful. Those who develop more slowly will not lose the opportunity for advancement which comes from conscientious work, high motivation and good character. Not only is performance the basis of reward, but the individual gets many chances throughout his life to achieve his full capacities. This is the very heart of our free enterprise system and our respect for the individual. To be sure it is more expensive, but again and again we have chosen to pay the extra cost. This is essential to our way of life.

To keep pace with rapid advances in the world around us, the citizen as a taxpayer and voluntary contributor will have to spend more money on education in the years to come. Our double system of higher education—public and private—is unique, but our progress has been built around it. The private system is immensely important to us because it sets the pace. It needs voluntary support both small and large, and encouragement from all.

Not only is there a responsibility on the part of the citizen to support local education to meet our national ideals, but there is a very real and practical self-interest involved on the part of industry. The vigorous industrial operations of any community will need a plentiful supply of young people to man the desk and the machine. The growing complications of our industrial society and the expansion of knowledge and skills will require even better educated and more carefully trained employees than ever before

To those who have to face the explosive nature of higher education in the decades ahead the interest which groups of private citizens are showing is a real inspiration. Many will be encouraged by their example.

Dorothea Ellen Devlin (B.A. 1958) will study in Australia.

NEW BOARD MEMBER

The Rev. Dr. George E. Sweazey, new minister of the Webster Groves Presbyterian Church, Webster Groves, Missouri, has been elected to the Lindenwood Advisory Board.

Since 1953 Dr. Sweazey has been pastor of Huguenot Memorial Church, Pelham, New York. A former student of President McCluers, he received his B.A. from Westminster College, his B.D. from Princeton University, and earned his Ph.D. from the University of Berlin. He is well known to St. Louisans as a former pastor of Tyler Place Presbyterian Church.

ELLEN DEVLIN AWARDED FELLOWSHIP ABROAD

Dorothea Ellen Devlin (B.A. 1958) has been awarded a Rotary Foundation Fellowship for advanced study abroad during 1959-60.

One of the 121 outstanding graduate students from 33 countries to receive this honor, Ellen will study English literature in preparation for a career in university level teaching, at one of the major universities in Australia.

Daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Theodore P. Devlin of Pine Bluff, Arkansas, Ellen is presently doing graduate work at the State University of Iowa. She expects to receive her master of arts degree in June.

At Lindenwood Ellen was awarded the President's Scholarship, the Freshman Writing Prize, the Spahmer Writing Prize, and was on the dean's honor roll.

Another Devlin sister, Mildred Elizabeth, is an admissions counselor for the college.

ON THE CAMPUS

LC AND ROLLA CHOIRS COMBINE . . . The 50 voices of the Lindenwood choir combined with the Missouri School of Mines choir of more than 70 voices and the St. Charles men's choir to present Handel's "Messiah" at a vespers service in the chapel in December. The Missouri School of Mines choir has made an annual Christmas visit to LC for the past five years. Last year the two choirs combined for the first time to sing the "Messiah". The presentation met with such response from students and townspeople that it was repeated this year.

MARRIAGE SYMPOSIUM . . . The dynamics of courtship and marriage was the overall subject of a week of conferences and convocations December 1-4. Sponsored by Linden Scroll, the symposium featured Mrs. Arnold Nash, well known lecturer and family life expert, as speaker. Mrs. Nash, who is marriage counselor at the University of North Carolina, cited basic ideas and gave constructive suggestions to be used in solving some of the major problems which confront young people today.

DR. SWAIN LECTURES . . . Dr. J. Carter Swain, one of the 32 men on the committee in charge of writing the revised standard version of the Bible, visited the campus. He lectured to Bible classes and conducted a question-answer period with students. A Bible scholar, Dr. Swain is an authority on the Dead Sea Scrolls.

MARSH PIANO CONCERT . . . Ozan Marsh, concert pianist in residence, gave his annual college concert at a convocation in the chapel on the evening of December 11. This was Mr. Marsh's first appearance before the student body after his fall tour of 35 concerts throughout the U.S. and Canada.

OPEN HOUSE AT McCLUERS' . . . President and Mrs. McCluer held open house for the students on December 8, officially opening the Christmas season at Lindenwood. Lights of the first Christmas tree on campus greeted guests who arrived in half-hour shifts from 7 to 9:30 p.m. Mrs. McCluer, assisted by faculty wives, took the students on a tour of her home and displayed the dolls and pipes collected from all parts of the world by her and Dr. McCluer.

NEW ADMISSIONS COUNSELOR . . . Nancy Jane Siegfried is new on the Admissions staff. She will cover the states of Kansas and Nebraska. Miss Siegfried, a graduate of the University of Indiana, was a youth counselor for the camp in Ludington, Michigan for several summers, where she has known the McCluers and other St. Charles people.

KANSAS CITY MEETING . . . Lindenwood sent eight student delegates to the annual meeting of the Missouri State Teachers Association in Kansas City. Entertainment highlight of the weekend was the program, "Hi-Fi Holiday," by Fred Waring and his Pennsylvanians.

YOUNG ARTISTS GUILD . . . A print sale sponsored by the Young Artists Guild was held in Roemer Hall. Reproductions from the Konrad Prothmann collection of masterpieces from the Renaissance through contemporary periods were offered. Profits from the sale will be used to buy lighting equipment for Roemer exhibition hall.

MOCK UN SESSION . . . "Should Red China Be Admitted to the United Nations?" was the subject of the debate of the Model Security Council which took place at Maryville College. Lindenwood represented Sweden. Annika Skott and Mitzi Anderson were delegates. Eleven universities and colleges represented the countries which are present members of the UN Security Council. Dr. Earnest Brandenburg of Washington University was chairman of the meeting.

AID NEW CHURCH . . . Teaching Sunday School was just one of the duties ten LC students performed when they helped establish a new church. A film of their activities at the John Knox Presbyterian Church, Florissant, Missouri, was shown on KMOX-TV. Until the church of approximately 150 people was organized and its members able to take over the teaching chores, the young women continued to help.

PROSPECTIVE STUDENTS VISIT . . . Twenty high school girls from the Kansas City area spent a weekend at the college in November. Getting to know Lindenwood was an exciting affair for the prospective students—dormitory life, "gab" sessions, "coke" parties, and even dates for the annual freshman Harvest Ball. Mrs. Rowland Farrell, admissions counselor, arranged the visit and acted as chaperon.

LINDENWOOD RADIO PROGRAMS . . . A series of twice-monthly radio programs using LC faculty and students began January 11 on St. Charles station KADY. The public service programs, utilizing talent from several departments of the college, will present something of the general background of a liberal arts college.

RELIGION IN LIFE WEEK . . . Dr. John Olert, pastor of Knox Presbyterian Church, Cincinnati, Ohio, will be the speaker and leader for the annual Religion in Life week, February 16-20.

NEW CLUB ORGANIZED . . . The Philosophy Club organized last fall under the direction of Dr. Eugene C. Conover, philosophy professor and sponsor of the group. The informal group will meet four times this year. The purpose of the club is to provide an opportunity for students who have had courses in philosophy to discuss philosophical issues of importance in our time.

NEW CONVOCATIONS . . . Several departments of the college will be responsible for convocation programs this year. Drama students presented a Christmas play and in January music students took part in a convocation recital.

Laurel Ann Sheehan, Honolulu, Hawaii, was queen of the Harvest Ball. Her attendants were Melaney McAfee, Amarillo, Texas, and Sandra Cook, Little Rock, Arkansas.

Informal "coke" party for weekend visiting prospective students.

Nancy Jane Siegfried, new admissions counselor for Kansas and Nebraska.

Big night for freshmen. At annual Harvest Ball.

Speaking of Sports

Life at Lindenwood is a balanced program of many things—including sports. The department of physical education, under the able leadership of Dorothy Ross, Grazina Amonas, Sara Harris and Fern Palmer, combines health and pleasure. It offers each student supervised classes in sports and the opportunity for team play or to just relax with favored sports, like tennis, archery, golf, or swimming.

A woman brings a lot of natural ability to sports, and a big edge in grace, form, and competitive urge. Lindenwood women participate in many athletic events, learn water safety, study camp counseling, and in doing so improve their own health and appearance. After all, a young man wants his girl to understand the game and share his own enthusiasm. And very often, the Lindenwood girl's only problem is not to let him see that she knows the score better than he does!

A highlight each year. Annual spring Water Ballet.

Dorothy Ross, professor of physical education, gives some tips on "the short game."

Bowling, an innovation this year, is right down LC's alley.

LINDENWOOD

EDITOR'S NOTE:

This is the first in a series of letters from students to the alumnae. It is hoped that the series may help yesterday's Lindenwood women better understand their college and its students today.

In the spring of 1954 the student body overwhelmingly adopted an honor system to become effective that fall. It was the beginning of something towards which Lindenwood had been working for several years. The Honor System Committee, in referring the code to student approval, stated that the value of the code lay in its goals, which were to develop a sense of personal integrity, to create an atmosphere of trust, and to foster cooperation among students, faculty, and administration. The students accepted the honor code as a responsibility as well as a privilege. It is a proven success.

Dear "Girls":

How much fun it was reading through the last Alumnae Bulletin! We enjoyed having you on campus last fall. It made your weekend mean much more to us.

We loved "horning in" on your reminiscing sessions. Dear me, things have changed since you were here! I must admit though, that I'm glad my Lindenwood days have been Student Government-Honor System ones. Remember Thursday evening on alumnae weekend, when Jane came in to say that she had just finished typing the E. Lit. test? I'll never forget that look you had when we didn't all pounce on her. You were interested in our honor system and seemed really surprised to find that the walls around the college are much lower now than when you were students.

As you know, Lindenwood has been under the Honor System for almost five years. We are proud to be among the schools which can and have operated successfully under such a plan. After the students have lived under the system for about a month they are expected to sign the honor pledge, agreeing to follow it as long as they are here. The basic questions of truth and honesty of the code—the pledge not to cheat, steal, or falsify records—are the things we've been taught all our lives. At Lindenwood we put them into practice.

The Honor System makes a reality our belief in the integrity of the individual and the realization that we can grow to full moral and spiritual maturity only when we respect the rights of others. It's sort of the "No man is an island" idea. Lindenwood women are expected to base their lives on truth. Perhaps this sounds a bit lofty, but honestly, it works! What a good feeling it is to have a professor walk into the classroom and say, "Here's the exam; I'll be in my office if you need me." And what a relief it is to be able to leave your key in the mailbox; just one less thing to keep up with! At Lindenwood "ponies," "cheat sheets," and hiring the services of another student are unknown. You will seldom find a locked door. It is only through the concern and conscientiousness of each student that we gain this wonderful freedom of activity in our school, work, and social life.

Of course, we have problems. The most difficult part of the system comes with the misconstrued idea that reporting is "tattling." We do not tattle. Whenever a student feels justified in accusing a person of violating the Honor Code, she must go, first, to that person—discuss the situation—then give her twenty-four hours to report herself to some member of the Honor Board. It is only when the supposed violator fails to turn herself in, that the third person comes to the board. This rarely happens.

I could write much more on the problems and praises of our Honor System. I love it. Each year I have learned to cherish it more. Please be glad for us; it is wonderful to be a part of today's Lindenwood where there is freedom and respect for the individual.

Don't wait for another alumnae weekend to visit us.

Sincerely,

Becky Roberts (class of '59)
Longview, Texas

THE FACULTY

P O R T R A I T

WALTER M. BEATTIE, JR.

Many of us picture a sociologist as a person who merely collects data on people in a little black notebook. This concept is shattered, however, when we know Walter M. Beattie, Jr., professor of sociology at Lindenwood.

More than a teacher, Mr. Beattie is active in sociological work as well as campus activities. Especially interested in gerontology, he recently returned from the national meeting of the Gerontological Society in Philadelphia. A member of the Society's executive council, he was program chairman of the social welfare section of the national meeting.

Also in the field of gerontology Mr. Beattie has conducted studies of the aged in the towns of Wausau and Madison, Wisconsin, and has done much to promote interest in the problems of older people in these communities.

His interests, however, are not confined to the field of sociology. A favorite hobby is reading. "Not particularly books in my own field," he says laughingly. Other interests include music, art, and gardening when time allows.

Mr. Beattie has worked in varied fields. Besides teaching he has held jobs in industry and spent some time in the Merchant Marine.

Not satisfied with one undergraduate degree, he holds both a bachelor of arts and a bachelor of science from Rutgers University and the United States Merchant Marine Academy, respectively.

In writing his masters' thesis on the merchant seaman, Mr. Beattie drew on material from his Merchant Marine experience. He holds a masters degree from the University of Chicago. He has completed the course work for his doctors degree.

Originally from Roselle, New Jersey, Mr. Beattie is married and the father of two children, Linda, who is five, and Bobby, 16 months. His wife, the former Elizabeth Watts, was chairman of the LC art department from 1944 to 1951. The couple met at a meeting on marriage counselling at which they were both speakers.

Professor Beattie says he enjoys teaching but could not name a favorite course. He says courses vary with the group of students in each class.

Especially interested in the field of social welfare, he believes there are many interesting opportunities for college women in this field. In addition to the many interests which occupy him, Mr. Beattie finds time to help sponsor the junior, senior conversations, serve as faculty advisor to the honor board, and work on such projects as the recent symposium on courtship and marriage.

CHOIR WILL TOUR

THREE STATES

The Lindenwood Choir will make its annual tour leaving the college on March 20. This year the choir will go to Oklahoma, Kansas, and Missouri. Alumnae in the areas are urged to attend the concerts. Mr. Milton F. Rehg, associate professor of music and regular director of the choir, will tour with the group.

The tentative schedule is: March 20, Springfield, Mo., First Presbyterian Church; March 22, a.m., Tulsa, First Presbyterian Church; p.m., Sapulpa, First Presbyterian Church; March 23, a.m., Tulsa, Will Rogers High School; p.m., Bartlesville Jr. High School; evening, Coffeyville, First Presbyterian Church.

PRESIDENT McCLUER was the guest speaker at the First Presbyterian Church in Dallas in November. He spoke at both morning and evening services concerning the role of the church in higher education. In December, Dr. and Mrs. McCluer, together with Dean Nickell, attended the Christmas Brunch, sponsored by Kansas City alumnae, at the home of Mrs. James Reed, LC board member, in Kansas City.

DEAN PAULENA NICKELL attended a meeting of the Division of Higher Education of the Missouri State Teachers Association at which she was elected a member of the Executive Committee for a three year term.

DR. HOMER CLEVENGER, chairman of the department of history and government, met with the Inter-institutional Committee on Washington Semester held in Washington, D.C. This was Dr. Clevenger's tenth year to attend the convention.

ARTHUR KANAK, associate professor of art, was awarded a first prize at the St. Louis Artists' Guild Show for his oil painting, "Ozark Landscape."

WAYNE H. BALCH, music professor and also minister of music at a Webster Groves church, was heard over KMOX on Christmas Eve in a program featuring Christmas music originating from Webster Groves Christian Church.

LOUISE BEASLEY, mathematics professor, attended a national meeting of the Teachers of Mathematics at State College of Education in Greeley, Colorado. She appeared on a TV panel dealing with the use of television in the instruction of math. She was a state representative to the national meeting in Philadelphia last summer.

PATRICIA BENKMANN, music professor, gave the pre-symphony lecture at an afternoon concert of the St. Louis Symphony in December.

DR. AGNES SIBLEY, English professor, spoke to the American Association of University Professors discussion group in December on her trip to Greece.

BREMEN VAN BIBBER, professor of education, visited the University of Missouri in December for a meeting of the Student Education Association.

DR. HAZEL M. TOLIVER, classics professor, was elected vice president of the Classics Department of the Missouri State Teachers Association at its annual meeting in November.

MARY LICHLITER, director of guidance and placement, and EMMA PURNELL, associate professor of office management, attended a conference meeting of the North Central Association at Stephens College. The program topics centered on the theme of "Problems of College Counseling and Academic Advising."

IN MEMORIAM

Dr. Ray Garnett and John W. Stine, Jr., both former faculty members, died recently. Dr. Garnett, at the time of his death in River Falls, Wisconsin, was serving as professor of education at Wisconsin State Teachers College. Mr. Stine, originator of courses in radio at LC in the early 40's, died at the age of 55 while chairman of the speech department at De Paul University.

Michiko Takaki (B.A. 1953), Tokyo, Japan, graduate student at Southern Illinois University, Carbondale, Illinois, with Dr. Howard Long of that university. Before returning to the U.S. last year, Michiko was an English translator for THIS WEEK IN TOKYO.

LETTER FROM ASSOCIATION PRESIDENT

Dear Alumnae:

As the New Year gets under way, we each pause to reflect on the past year—its accomplishments and victories, those things we wanted to do but never quite got around to, old friends we wish we had taken time to contact. Does Lindenwood fall into that group?

Needless to say, your college days are among your happiest memories. Here, so many of your dreams took root. Here, you found so many of the ideas which have become your code for living. On reflecting, we alumnae feel a deep sense of gratitude to Lindenwood and its ever present influence on our lives.

Just as the New Year is a time for looking back, it is also a time to make plans for a better year to come. Won't you include Lindenwood in those plans?

There are four specific ways you can be helpful to your college:

1. Send a yearly contribution starting this year. Incidentally, an undesignated gift is the most useful. It can be used where it is most needed.

2. Talk Lindenwood everywhere you go, telling people what an outstanding college it is.

3. Send the leading students from your area to Lindenwood. They deserve each other!

4. Make your plans now to come to alumnae weekend next November. Make your reservations early! Those of us who were there last year are coming back en force. Make a reservation for the most fun you've had in years.

Lindenwood "girls" are doers. Do your part in supporting Lindenwood.

Dallas alumnae met with President and Mrs. McCluer in November at a luncheon.

The Southern California Club met in October in Arcadia. Doris Nahigian Gertmenian, council member from Pasadena, who was here for alumnae weekend in October, attended the meeting and writes, "I'd love to have some of the others take a trip back and get the same 'shot in the arm' that I did. It was wonderful! I really talked my head off at the meeting."

The Kansas City Club gave a coke party in November for prospective students. Club members are wearing name tags to identify themselves at each meeting.

In Centralia, Ill., Faye Kurre Prill arranged a program on international relations for the Fine Arts Department of that city. Rhoda Sotiropoulou, senior student from Athens, Greece, and Annika Skott, student from Gefle, Sweden, were invited as guest speakers. Frances Prill Niemeyer, president of the club presided, and Patricia Silkwood Parker was soloist. A picture of the three alumnae and two students, with a lengthy write-up, appeared in the Centralia papers.

MARK YOUR CALENDAR

Class reunions are sparkling, unforgettable events and, according to many alumnae, occasions which are all too rare. These words are substantiated by the remarks and letters to the alumnae office that always follow the alumnae weekends.

This year's big weekend bids to outshine those of the past. There are many things this year which will be new and different to the 14 classes when they hold their reunions on the weekend of November 6-7. Further details of the weekend will be published in the spring Bulletin.

Alumnae are urged to mark their calendars now and plan to be at Lindenwood for the biggest, best alumnae weekend ever, November 6-7.
