Nov. 2 midterm election approaches

Projected low turnout for student aged voters, disinterest could affect outcome

By Natasha Sakovich
 Managing Editor

A projected low turnout among young voters could significantly affect the selection of congressional candidates, as well as the outcome of major ballot issues, in the Nov. 2 midterm election, according to news reports and data from national organizations. In 2009 and 2010 statewide elections thus far, "youth turnout has been low compared to the 2006 midterm election," the Center for Information & Research on Civic Learning and Engagement (CIRCLE) reported.

Roughly 25.5 percent of the midterm election vote in 2006 was made up of voters ages 18-29, according to CIRCLE, which researches the political engagement of young Americans.

Current numbers for young voter turnout in special state elections for Massachusetts, New Jersey and Virginia were 15, 19 and 17 percent respectively.

Several Lindenwood University students interviewed about the upcoming elections said they planned on voting but were unsure of issues and were not particularly excited about it.

"I do plan on voting, but I'm just not sure who to vote for yet," sophomore Molly McCullough said. "I guess I'm looking forward to the vote, but it's not as exciting as the presidential election." Stephanie McLan, a graduate student, said she probably would vote, but like McCullough she hadn't decided whom she would support.

"I'm not particularly looking forward to this vote," she said.

John Oldani, vice president of Student Development, attributes the lack of voter interest to the fact that the election is a midterm, not a presidential election.

"Student interest in the midterm elections is kind of like student elections here on campus: There's just not much concern for midterm elections," Oldani said.

LindenLodge overcomes doubts, issues

Despite initial 'growing pains,' new university off-campus housing receives high marks

By Kenny Gerling
 Staff Reporter

Despite a few setbacks, Lindenwood's new off-campus men's housing complex, the LindenLodge, is receiving a positive response from both residents and administration.

The building, a former university and renovated to act as a men's dormitory. It primarily houses juniors, seniors and graduate students, Vice President of Student Development John Oldani said. This is its first semester in operation.

"A lot of the issues were left over from the hotel itself. Maintenance takes care of anything pretty quickly,"

—Marcus Snozek
 LindenLodge Co-RD

"It's going well ... I haven't heard any complaints from people wanting to switch," Oldani said.

Oldani said there were some issues preparing the complex for residents. He said the university initially purchased a lot next to LindenLodge with the intent of it being used for additional parking.

Despite the lot being paved and ready, there was a delay in erecting the necessary lighting. All light poles were just placed in the last two weeks. The lot is now totally completed.

"At the beginning of the semester, one of the common concerns was the distance of the complex from campus," Snozek said.

He said that most who were experiencing issues with transportation have now made arrangements to ride to campus with other residents.

LU Band wins 'Best in parade'

By Christine Hoffmann
 Contributing Reporter

The Lindenwood marching band won "Best Walking Unit" in the third annual Homecoming parade last Saturday.

The band had been preparing for the performance for two weeks. At 8 a.m. Saturday, members gathered in the band room in the Scheidegger Center to assemble instruments and don their black and gold uniforms.

As they assisted each other in preparation, many grumbled about the early call time. "It's quiet," said Jack Koenig, a melophone player in the band. "I don't know if it's because of building excitement or because everyone's ready to fall asleep."

After warming up with several pep songs, the band walked across campus to Young Hall where other units were lined up. The side parking lot was filled with colorful floats and costumed students displaying this year's jungle theme.

The parade began at 10 a.m. Engines revved and people cheered as the first vehicle turned onto Watson, leading 25 decorated cars, 17 floats and seven walking units, doubling last year's count. The event also went off campus for the first time.

The parade passed through a crowd of nearly 1,000 cheering students, parents and alumni. "There were a lot more people out there and it was exciting," said drum major Amanda Turner.

The parade ended at the Scheidegger Center. Tired band members trudged to the band room, some collapsing on the floor in mock exhaustion.

Band director Ryan Curtis was pleased. "I thought the band did well. It seems like it was all positive."

'LindenLink' collaborative website to run

By Wes Murrell
Contributing Reporter

Lindenwood's School of Communications is creating a new multimedia website called the "LindenLink," with plans to go live sometime this semester. The idea behind LindenLink is that it will be an Internet hub for all of Lindenwood's School of Communications publications.

Tom Pettit, faculty advisor for The Legacy, said, "It's an umbrella website over all of the communications department media and programs."

Pettit is one of the faculty members coordinating the project. "It's really a committee effort," Pettit said. Other members include Jason Lively, Jill Falk in broadcast, and Bob Wigginton in journalism.

Others who have helped to develop the website include Lindenwood students Derek Schroeder, Heather Bertram, Steven Kornfeld and communications graduate assistants Chris Bennett and Wes Murrell. "I've done everything from controlling the content of the site to designing the site and presenting it to constituents in the communications department," Bennett said.

Pettit, however, plans to expand the workforce to undergraduate students to, "get undergrads into it and give them the opportunity to take it where it's going to go."

"Convergence is about telling stories," Pettit said, "in the most effective ways and having alternative ways to tell those stories."

He mentioned writing, video, audio, and photography as some of the intended outlets. "The goal is to have a website that is open to Lindenwood news and events."

Though Pettit works in journalism, his department is only one of several at work on LindenLink. "Broadcast, print, Internet - everybody in communications eventually will contribute, we hope," Pettit said.

For more information on LindenLink, please e-mail the journalism department at journismlab@lindenwood.edu, or contact Tom Pettit at TPettit@lindenwood.edu.

Students "race to be the king" at a 5k Run & Walk on Oct. 16. All proceeds benefited CHAD's Coalition for Adolescent Depression and Suicide.

Extensive festivities fit for a 'King'

By Amanda O'Brien
Staff Reporter

This year's homecoming week was set to be the biggest homecoming celebration Lindenwood has seen so far.

Homecoming week was Oct. 11-16 and included a variety of new and unique activities. The theme of this year's homecoming was "It's Great to be King."

"We're trying to make this homecoming three times bigger than it has been in previous years," said Jennifer Swisher, vice president of the Lindenwood Student Government Association.

The annual parade was set to be much larger this year as well. 20 floats made up the parade, compared to last year which only had about nine. The parade took place off campus this year for part of the route.

Giang Tran, Assistant

Director of Student Life & Leadership, said that this year will be unique in that the focus of homecoming is going to be charitable and give back to the community. "The great thing about being king is being able to give back," Tran said.

There was also a "Race to be King" 5k Run & Walk held on Saturday, with all proceeds benefiting CHAD's Coalition for Adolescent Depression and Suicide. There was also a blood drive held on Friday called "The Lion's Provide."

The theme "It's Great to be King" was chosen during the summer. "We liked this as the theme because it expressed pride for the university," Tran said.

Highlighted events included "The Maze" illusionist performance and a concert by the band Switchfoot.

Grads will face a scary new world when they leave

Halloween...the time when you pay money to get scared out of your mind. The time when you may experience so much fear you can feel every fiber of your being stand on end, afraid of what may come around the next corner of the haunted house you're in.

This is how I am feeling in relation to what I'm supposed to do at this point in my college career as well as in my actual life, and I can't wait for these horrifying feelings to be over.

What steps do I take? How do I even begin to look for a job? What do I even want to do? I've never done this before. There's no syllabus. All of these are questions that run through my mind 24 hours a day, 7 days a week.

Well, my first thought was, "Hey, I should go ask a bunch of successful people much older than me what to do." Genius idea, right?

Wrong. They say, "There's no manual that comes with life. But the good news is we had to figure it out, and I'm sure you will too. You're a smart kid and any company that invested in you would be getting a huge return."

Hey, that's awesome, but how do I find this company?

That is the process I'm in right now. The way I'm handling my "what-ifs" and emotionally spiraling out of control is by researching companies.

Many people that I have quizzed on their successful lives have said, "Go work for Google!"

So, I'm starting there. Never in my wildest dreams would I ever imagine Google as a legitimate source of employment for myself. Not only would it mean uprooting to a different city and state, but it also means starting fresh, on my own, likely not knowing anyone. And I couldn't be more terrified.

Maybe that's not my starting point, where I'm supposed to go spend a couple years of my life, but I remain confident that I'll find my niche. And let me tell you one thing; when I do, it's going to be time for Thanksgiving.

When I say this, I don't necessarily mean it to be literal, as in I'll find a job some weekend in November or it's over.

I mean that after I've paid a lot of money to be scared out of my mind, I get out of this big haunted house upon graduation and hopefully, if I have "real" job, it's going to be time to get on my knees and thank the good Lord because it wasn't easy. My adrenaline has been rushing for so long thanks to tricks and treats around every corner in order to prepare for the unknown.

I'm extremely ready to be to the thankful stage, but it's not time for me yet. I'm stuck somewhere around early metaphorical November, in this job search, but keeping my chin up and my hopes high.

With guidance, advice and encouragement, anything is possible. That's what all of you scared seniors have to keep in mind.

That, and, I don't think a job search ever killed anyone, so don't be too afraid. Keep looking, searching and you'll know when it feels right.

Maybe working at Google is the career for you, and maybe it's not. Who knows? The world is a big place, so get ready to make your mark in it.

Facebook apps steal personal information

In the age of the Internet and realm of Facebook, most people know that the expectation of privacy is ridiculous and borderline absurd.

With this being known, most students do the best they can to limit potential threats to their personal lives and private information; they untag themselves from photos, put their profiles on the strictest settings, etc.

What students may not know, though, is that the applications students use to kill time on Facebook could be killing their privacy.

In an ongoing series titled "What they know" published by The Wall Street Journal, news came out over the weekend telling the 500 million users of Facebook that top ten apps such as "Farmville" and "Texas Hold-em Poker" are accessing the personal information of the users accounts and relaying this information back to the companies who produce such applications.

The companies who collect the information then sell it to other companies, such as media moguls like MSN, Google, Gannett and AOL, among others.

What makes this disturbing, beyond the fact that personal information is being mined and sold like OPEC petroleum, is the fact that such actions go directly against the privacy policy statement administered by Facebook.

It seems that even Facebook has created a monster that it is unable to control.

Telling people that their information is safe when it isn't is one thing, but not knowing how to be able to prevent other companies from taking control of your technology and using against your wishes is another problem all together.

Where this comes into play for students is the ever looming job search that is about to affect their lives.

If companies are shelling out millions of dollars to get this information as an investment, what's to stop them from using the same methods to look up the backgrounds of potential hires, another big investment?

The moral of the story is you can never be too careful with personal information and never assume just because someone tells you something is secure that it truly is.

Homecoming lives up to expectations, shows Lindenwood's true colors

What a week it's been. Let's do it again! The homecoming week of activities brought not only a sigh of relief but also a change in routine.

A previous week of midterms had caught a number of students off-guard and like them, I would myself by attending all that was to come in order to relieve some of the stress that came with the previous week.

Once we were done with work and learn, we proceeded to the dunk booth that had drenched half the concrete outside Spellmann. This stand was set up by Student Activities to fundraise and bring awareness to the club's projects.

After I talked a friend into signing up, I took my round of throws at the target and boy, did it bring back some carnival memories.

After this was MAZE; a Christian themed magic show, that was held at the Cultural Center.

It started off by the illusionist swallowing a thread and pulling it out of his abdomen like an odd looking, overly-grown stomach hair, it prepared us for its unpredictably.

The house was packed and although the sound system was faulty, the laughter from the illusionist's jokes was contagious, even if you had not heard the joke. Next on my list was the pajama party, held by the Black Student Union.

The venue was dim lit and the sound system blasted away. The turn out was fair, and a slight conversation of what life would be like if pajamas were our work clothes brought some interesting points.

Depending on whom you were talking to.

Uncomfortably for some of us, the "freshman 15" is not a myth and we had overgrown our '95 "Power Rangers" themed pajamas. The crowds poured in as I bit down on the free ice cream served by our R.D's.

It was a cold night to be having an outdoor concert, but the liveliness of the crowd around you quickly warmed up the air.

For four hours, we jammed to Zack Weber, The Almost, and Switchfoot.

Those at the front initiated the crowd surfing, even a car tire was passed down.

This stopped because some people did not want to be put down.

The next day's parade was colorful and to an extent, overshadowed the 5K run that brought in loud cheers for the runners.

The rest of the day's events were exciting and after the football team's win, it showed that once in the NCAA, we will pick on teams the size of ours.

For those of us who just joined Lindenwood, this makes up for more than just an overdue first impression, but also the collectiveness this institution has.

The turn out of both alumni and students, assured us that our school spirit does not end upon graduation.

The Student Activities department and various student organizations have done a tremendous job and we recognize your hard work.

I therefore recommend them to organize the Presi-

Six Flags Fright Fest impresses, scares

By Matt Korn
Entertainment Editor

Six Flags St. Louis has always prided itself on providing family fun and fond memories; with October now in full swing they can add fright to that mantra. But unlike hardcore haunts like The Darkness or Creepyworld, Six Flags offers something for everyone. So if you have younger siblings, if you have trouble with the intensity of The Darkness or if you just like having a good time, Six Flags' Fright Fest is the place for you.

During the day the atmosphere of the park is tame, but look around and you can tell that preparations have been made for when the sun goes down. Tombstones, skeletons and spiders are scattered around the park in anticipation of nightfall. Before the frights start, the park entertains adults and kids alike with rides, costume characters and live action shows.

Shows make up a significant part of what Six Flags offers entertainment wise, with some acts performed by entertainment employees and some acts contracted to outside performers.

Tommy Drake is one of those outside performers. Mr. Drake performs magic along with juggling outside the Palace Theater, his stunts and humor being family friendly. Don't let the "family friendly" fool you. Even though his humor may come off a little dry at times, his tricks are impressive on even a teenager's rigorous scale.

Las Vegas Comedy Hypnotist Steve Daly and his act, "Trick or Trance" (located at the Empire Theater), start off strong and captivating, but taper off weakly towards the end. Just keep telling yourself it's for the kids and you'll feel better.

One show that doesn't disappoint is "Dead Man's Party." Zombies emerge on to the Palace Porch and dance to a mix of songs that inspire thoughts of Halloween. That is except for "See You Again" by Miley Cyrus, I still don't get why that song was on the playlist. At the end, the audience is invited to step forward and participate in the Time Warp with the cast.

"Dr. Fright's Freakout" is a wacky musical revue played out on the Palace Porch. It's not bad but it seems to make one yearn for a legitimate Dr. Fright resurrection. After all, to some guests the resurrection of Dr. Fright is supposed to be the official start of Fright Fest.

Amidst all of these shows, one stands out as THE show to see while at the park: "Love at First Fright." It doesn't matter if you're two years old or two hundred, this show is an absolute treat.

The story is classic (with a few SFSTL touches thrown in), the actors are phenomenal, and the overall experience is great. I dare you not to enjoy this show, it's impossible.

When darkness falls across the land, and the mid...When the sun goes down, Six Flags takes a turn for the spooky. The haunted attractions open for business, creatures (clowns, vampires, crazies and trolls, oh my) start stalking around in their prospective areas and park speakers start to play sounds that are supposed to instill fear into those who are still among the living. Although when you hear those sounds in park, in broad daylight, hours before darkness falls, the effect isn't as powerful.

The creatures that go bump in the night are separated into small groups and scattered around the park. I was very impressed with how well they performed. Victorian vampires skulk around the front mall, trolls trounce around DC Circle and a group of psychotic clowns terrorize the area in front of Sound Stage 2.

Missouri's Most Haunted Locations

By Abby Buckles
Staff Writer

Fear House-Steven A. LaChance wrote the book "The Uninvited" about his experience in an old house, known as the "Fear House", in Union, Missouri.

In May of 2001 Steven and his two sons Elliot, 11 and Eli, 12 and daughter Eliza, 13 moved into the spacious house in Union, Missouri unaware of the unexplainable events that would follow.

Soon after moving in, Elliot claimed to see a clown standing before him in the hallway. Eliza heard noises and saw her closet door slide open by itself.

Steven saw the thermostat drop 30 degrees right before his eyes as he experienced what felt like an electrical charge running through his body.

The final moment of convincing came one night while the children were upstairs and the house began to shake violently, the doors slammed shut locking the children away from their father and loud screaming began to steadily rise from somewhere in the house.

Whatever "it" was, Steven said, targets everyone's worst fears. Elliot is afraid of clowns, Eliza's afraid of closets and Steven's worst fear is not being able to get to his children.

The LaChance family moved out after that night.

Steven wrote, "I still drive past that house every once in awhile and when I get enough nerve I look up at the upstairs window and it's there. Watching. Waiting. Angry."

Another family, Linda Marsh and Emit Brison along with their 13-year old daughter Ashley, moved in.

The new tenants continuously heard footsteps and slamming doors.

Ashley saw a baby hanging from a tree outside and began cutting herself. Concerned about the possibility of her trying to commit suicide, Linda checked her daughter into the hospital.

"I still drive past that house every once in awhile and when I get enough nerve I look up at the upstairs window and it's there. Watching. Waiting. Angry."

Linda called investigators and a Roman Catholic priest to come to perform a blessing on the house, though he didn't bless every room in the house and seemed to want to get out.

And one night while in bed, Linda said she felt hands around her throat as if something was choking her and had left bruises on her neck. She became depressed and suicidal, was admitted to the hospital, was prescribed with depression and advised to move out of the house.

The family left the house and Ashley was released from the hospital.

Some time later, another family with six children moved into the house and they too moved out.

Ghostly Sibley public service announcement

By Matt Korn
Entertainment Editor

Students on campus Halloween night should keep watch for the “ghost” of Mary Sibley. Mrs. Sibley, along with her husband George, founded Lindenwood as a college for girls back in 1827. Long after Mrs. Sibley’s death, students reported seeing her “ghost” walk from the graveyard to Sibley Chapel, playing the church organ when she got inside.

For reasons unknown, students gave up reporting this “phenomena” in the 1970s (insert hippy joke here).

Avid ghost hunters excited by the paranormal may want to meet at the gazebo behind Sibley Hall around 10:30 Halloween night for the chance to catch “Mary Sibley rise from the grave.”

Although students will be able to watch Sibley’s “ghost” walk from the graveyard to the chapel, Sibley Chapel will be closed off to all students.

Speaking of psychotics, escaped asylum patients run rabid down by The Slaughter House, the parks only haunted house.

The house is awesome. I’m never usually fazed by haunted attractions, but there is an element of the house that had even me asking one of the employee’s “are you guys joking?” The charge to walk through The Slaughter House is well worth it-don’t miss it if you go.

One thing to miss, however, is the one thing that seems to struggle every October: Terror Train. I imagine it’s difficult to make a horror attraction out of the train that runs through the park, but a new script that feels like it was penned by a depressed Dr. Seuss doesn’t help at all. As my colleague was swift to point out, the actors need to make sure the lip-syncing matches up with the pre-recorded tracks.

Despite Terror Train, Six Flags St. Louis has made massive improvements to Fright Fest, and it really shows. One might be quick to think that Six Flags’ recent financial troubles might hinder its quality, but the experience quickly dispatches those thoughts.

There are some little things that can be improved, but for the most part the park expertly utilizes the resources they have, making Fright Fest a hauntingly good time.

Wildwood and Ellisville police officers patrol the entrance to Lawler Ford Road, more commonly referred to as “Zombie Road.” Both police departments have received numerous complaints over the years, and now trespassing on the three-mile stretch of road is strictly prohibited.

Haunted

Zombie Road-Within Chesterfield, Missouri, the legend of “Zombie Road” lives. The road was named this because some say the railroad workers who once worked there rise from their graves at times to roam about.

Some claim to hear old music, see moving lights and see ghostly figures from that era.

Throughout the years, several children and adults alike have died in the bordering river and have been found washed up on the shore. The railroad has seen it’s fair share of blood as well.

In the 1970s, two teens were struck by an oncoming train.

During the 90s, a mother and her five-year old child were crossing a bridge when an oncoming train met them. The mother instantaneously pushed her child off the bridge. The child was saved, but the mother was not.

Since then, several have come to the area to practice the occult and several other rituals. It has also become an area for teens to come seeking thrills. In the 70s, a group of teens began “huffing”, in doing so, one of the boys became unconscious and died. Other drug related deaths have happened over the years.

In the 60s, a teen couple were atop the bluffs overlooking the road. The male somehow lost his balance and fell to his death, but not before his face and scalp became caught in the fork of a tree protruding outwards from the side of the bluff.

Other instances of deaths caused by falling off the bluffs above have occurred.

Suicides and murders have also happened here. In the 70s, a hunter stumbled across a still-running car at the end of the road. As he looked closer, he saw a hose running from the exhaust pipe to the inside of the car, the driver slumped over the wheel.

Several people have heard voices, have been touched and have seen a human sized shadowed figure descend upon the road before them.

Cyclists face strenuous fall competition

By Zak Hafner
Contributing Reporter

The cycling season has been a long one for the road riders, having completed over nine back to back weekends of racing during the spring semester.

After taking a summer break while still racing the fall season started off with the Gateway cup, a series of four days of road criterium racing.

The races occurred at Lafayette square, Francis Park, The Hill at St. Ambrose's church, and Benton Park.

The LU cycling team will be in action next in the Cyclo Cross Race held in Edwardsville, IL this Saturday.

Lindenwood riders appeared in all races except for the women's pro 1/2 race and in particular riders Brandon Feehery and Jose CuelloGarcia rode exceptionally well in the pro 1/2 race finishing top 30 out of fields of more than 100 riders.

Other riders had several top 20 finishes during the weekend in various categories.

The mountain bikers had a great beginning to their season with two second place finishes at the A class level.

The racers competed in Louisville, Kentucky, on Sept. 11 and 12 where Lindsey Wilson College hosted the event.

The next day both riders finished top five in short track cross country, while Justin Pollnow was forced to abandon his third place position due to a mechanical issue in the C class.

Most recently, the team competed at collegiate track nationals in Indianapolis, Indiana. The lions posted a 12 place overall finish out of 20 teams. This feat was also done without any female riders which added points towards the overall finish. The team is always looking for new female recruits of all levels to add to the team. The newest female team member is Sara Lukas, who recently transferred from Lindsey Wilson College this semester.

The riders also had a chance to meet with Ryder Hefjedal, seventh place finisher at the 2010 Tour de France. The ride was a casual one with a professional rider.

This was a welcome change since most of the collegiate competitors race as professional cyclist when they are not competing for their respective universities.

The Lions do not compete within NCAA or NAIA sanctioned events but are governed by USA cycling collegiate, in which riders can compete collegiately and professionally without penalty.

USA Cycling Collegiate Division is the governing body of Collegiate Cycling in the United States. The Division was founded as a committee in 1995 and then officially recognized in 2004.

The requirements for students to compete at events are that they must be a full time student and be in good standing with their school.

Running back Denodus O'Bryant breaks free for a huge run after a block from Jamere Holland. O'Bryant Ran the ball five times Saturday for 134 yards and two touchdowns in a 90-19 win over the Culver-Stockton University Wildcats. The Lions broke their previous scoring record of 76.

Lions break scoring record with 90-19 win

By Alex Jahncke
Sports Editor

For the last two weeks the Lindenwood Lions football team has been making a lot of noise by braking records.

Last week it was Phillip Staback, when he broke the school record for passing touchdowns in a game with six. He finished the game with 436 passing yards, leading his team to a 48-14 victory over Baker University.

Then this weekend the Lions took on the Culver-Stockton Wildcats, and broke yet another record with a 90-19 victory, scoring the most points in school history.

"Really all week we talked about not worrying about the score," said Head Coach Patrick Ross. "We just needed to play Lindenwood football: play to the whistle, play hard, and play fast. I did not want anyone to get caught up on the score."

Everything was clicking for the Lions in this homecoming game. They opened up with a quick touchdown pass from Staback to Matt Brown. The score was the start of a huge day for every part of the team.

The real story was that of the run game.

At half time alone the Lions had four running backs go for 173 yards on only 12 attempts. They also had five touchdowns in the first half.

The second half was much of the same. Denodus

O'Bryant ended the game with 134 rushing yards and two touchdowns. He ended the game with a 26.8 yard per carry average.

"The offensive line played really well," Ross said. "The running backs broke a lot of tackles. I think their strength really showed. They played really strong and physical, and when they get out in the open they are fast enough to make a couple of guys miss out in space too."

O'Bryant was not the only back who had a great game. Nate Orlando was the real highlight from the backfield, scoring four total touchdowns (three rushing and one receiving). LeMarrien Parson also passed the century mark for rushing yards with 109.

LU ended the game with a stellar 10.7 yards per carry average, totaling 376 yards on 35 carries and eight touchdowns. In the air, quarterback Staback threw for 277 yards and three touchdowns.

As the score showed, the Lions were all around dominant, including on the defense side of the ball. Culver-Stockton, which is predominately a running team, ran the ball for 240 yards and only one touchdown. While this may seem like a lot of yards they did it on 57 rushing attempts.

Since the loss to Mid-America Nazarene the Lions have gone 3-0.

They will be in action next this weekend when they go on the road to take on Benedictine College.

"The offensive line played really well. The running backs broke a lot of tackles. I think their strength really showed."

—Coach Ross

My Take

LU hockey

We are less than a month removed from the start of the hockey season, and both the men and women are at the top of their game again.

Something I love about being the sports editor of Lindenwood's newspaper is that the teams make it very easy to my job. This especially includes the hockey teams.

You see, the women's team has won three championships in a row, while the men's team is working towards their third straight championship.

These teams never cease to amaze me.

Week after week they dominate their opponents. I don't just mean everyday teams, I mean top ranked opponents that are playoff quality.

I'm on my third year of following both these teams and it is not hard to see why they are so good. It all starts with their coaching.

The women's coach Vince O'Mara is as dedicated as any coach I've ever met. He is genuinely interested in his team's success.

The same goes for the men. The last two championships were led by former coach Derek Schaub, but this season they are being led by Rick Zombo.

His experience with the game of hockey may just be what the Lions need to clinch their third consecutive championship.

On top of the coaching staff, the teams just have the all around the talent and determination to play as well as they do. Let me break it down for you.

I'll start with the men. In the past two seasons the Lions have compiled a record of 84-9.

This season they are adjusting to a coaching change, but it does not seem to be affecting them one bit. They have gotten off to a 5-1 start, and they aren't showing any signs of slowing down.

Although they are off to

Alex Jahncke
Sports Editor

a great start, they are doing it without some of their top players that will come back next semester.

This does not bid well for their opponents because at full strength their talent is almost limitless.

Then there are the Lady Lions. After three championships in a row, and a 111-8-5 record over those seasons,

"The women are already deserving of the 'dynasty' title hands down, and if the men can clinch this year's championship, I would not mind giving them the title."

you would think that they have nothing left to prove, but that is not the case.

They are playing with every bit of heart they have.

Led by their senior captain Lisa Moreau, the team has started its season at 6-1.

When I asked Lisa about their chances this season, their was one big question mark, and that was how the goalie situation would play out.

Last season they graduated Rebecca Bernet, who played three terrific seasons for the Lady Lions.

She ended her career with a 1.17 goals against average and a 94-7-3 record. With a player of that caliber it is hard to fill the void, but they are finding a way to do it.

They are using a duel threat in goal with Kayetoinette Stock and Kayla Canning.

So far they have split the time evenly.

I mean with all this you can't help but toss around the word dynasty.

It's hard to refer to a team

Lady Lions are poised for a strong finish

By Issa David
Staff Reporter

The 23 - 11 Lady Lions Volleyball team went perfect at the Lindenwood Invitational during Homecoming and set themselves up for a strong finish to the season. The team is 6-2 in HAAC play, 8-3 at home and 6-1 on the road.

Before the Invitational, the Lady Lions were struggling to beat teams they should beat. The team had a disappointing 3-2 loss to 11-10 Benedictine College of Kansas, Mo.

"We need to learn how to finish against teams we should beat," said Coach Ron Young.

The Lady Lions had a great come back winning six in a row including the Invitational.

"We rebounded well, but it will be nice to have that conference win," Young said.

The streak started with the Lady Lions beating Carroll College of Montana, 3-1. Then the team beat under .500 conference foe MidAmerica Nazarene of Kansas 3-2. When the Invitational began, the Lady Lions got a shutout win against conference rival Avila, 3-0. They beat Oklahoma City 3-2, Ashford, 3-1 and ended with a shutout win against 23 ranked Olivet Nazarene of Illinois.

The Lady Lions are ranked 24 in the NAIA and third in the HAAC. On Oct. 21 the Lady Lions travel to Fulton, Mo to face William Woods University, and then on Oct. 26 they travel to Liberty, MO, for a conference match with William Jewell College (WJC) who is 17 - 8 and ranked second in the HAAC.

This is an important match up for the Lady Lions because WJC is 5-1 in HAAC play and LU is 6-2.

If the Lady Lions win, this puts them second in the conference and on track to have the first round of the HAAC tournament at LU.

It also means that if WJC and LU have identical records, LU will own the tie-breaker. The HAAC tournament starts on Nov. 6.

Lodge

The LindenLodge provides off-campus residence for up to 224 male students. It has received positive response since opening in August 2010.

Oldani said that the university was aware of the transportation issue but found the establishment of a shuttle service impractical because of the legal requirements necessary to establish such a service and the university's failed attempt at a shuttle in spring 2010.

Snozek described other issues, such as slow internet and random entry card deactivation, as "growing pains." He said, "It's coming along - a little slower than I'd like, but it's getting there."

LindenLodge is located next to the Wal-Mart shopping center in St. Charles. According to the university, each room houses two students with a private bathroom.

In total, the building can accommodate 224 residents.

New LSGA Senator plans to address students' concerns

By Jasmine Smith
Staff Reporter

Graduate student Hicham Jaddoud wants to make Lindenwood University a better place for students.

As a newly elected student senator, he said he thinks he has the power to do just that, and he's ready for the challenge.

"There is a lot of responsibility in trying to honor the students' requests," Jaddoud, who is pursuing an MBA, said of his role as an advocate for student concerns.

Jaddoud

Jaddoud, of Morocco, is one of nine undergraduate and graduate students who were elected last month to the Lindenwood Student Government Association (LSGA) Senate, a new student advocacy group. LSGA, as mentioned in previous Legacy articles, is an organization with a mission to "search out, identify, and act upon student concerns in a constructive and effective manner."

Jaddoud said he plans to focus on campus security and parking. He said that parking is an issue, but it isn't as big as students make it. "There are many places to park around LU," Jaddoud said.

Jaddoud's focus will also be geared more towards LU graduate students.

"Because I am a graduate student, I will be more focused on graduate students' concerns. We have other undergraduate senators who will focus on undergraduate students' issues," Jaddoud said.

Stepping into the Senate seat wasn't much of a hassle for Jaddoud. Jaddoud said he was once a student government vice president as well as a president for two years. Jaddoud got his associates degree in Germany in Hospitality Marketing and his bachelor's degree in France.

He said that he got his foot in the door becoming a senator of LSGA because he used to attend the Speaker Series here at LU before he started his MBA.

On Oct. 19 at 4 p.m. all senators, as well as LSGA members, were scheduled to be in Young auditorium discussing some of the student concerns. Their goal was to create a basic list of problems and concerns students have on campus and find ways the LSGA senators can solve the students' issues.

To talk with Jaddoud, e-mail him at hj790@lionmail.lindenwood.edu.

Election

Voter turnout in the recent Lindenwood Student Government Association (LSGA) senate election represented 2.5 percent of the student body.

Only 250 students participated in the vote, although 9,945 students were eligible.

Student groups such as the Young Democrats, Young Republicans, the political science department and the history club have not been involved in publicizing the midterm elections for the upcoming Nov. 2 vote.

"Right now, [the Young Democrats club] doesn't meet regularly since we are having enough trouble just trying to get students to be in the club in non-presidential election years," said Gail Johnston, faculty sponsor of the club.

Johnston said that in 2008, club membership soared as a result of it being a presidential election year.

"We had regular weekly meetings and lots of students volunteering for the [President Barack] Obama campaign," Johnston said.

"In fact, there was even a non-political group holding voter registration here on campus that year."

Nationwide, there are 435 House seats, 37 Senate seats and 37 governorships, along with various ballot issues, that are at stake in the Nov. 2 election.

For Missouri, the Senate race is between Republican Roy Blunt and Democrat

Robin Carnahan, the Missouri secretary of state.

Nine House seats and three constitutional amendments, along with three propositions, will be on the Missouri ballot.

For a complete list of Missouri's Senate and House races, ballot issues, visit the League of Women Voters' website at <http://www.lwvstl.org/votersguide2010nov.html>.
