

The Lindenwood Colleges

First of all,

The Lindenwood Colleges are 140 acres of green lawns, hills, stately old trees and ivy-covered, red brick buildings — a scenic campus set in the historic Missouri River city of St. Charles, just minutes from metropolitan St. Louis and its international airport.

The Colleges offer graduate and undergraduate degrees in a co-educational environment. The Lindenwood Colleges are a dynamic and innovative higher-education cluster composed of Lindenwood College for Women, founded in 1827; its coordinate, Lindenwood College for Men; the Evening College; and the College for Individualized Education.

Lindenwood is accredited by The North Central Association of Colleges and Schools and by The National Council for Accreditation of Teacher Education.

Lindenwood Students

Undergraduate enrollment at Lindenwood totals approximately 1400 students of which close to half are full time. The remaining 700 students are enrolled for one or more day or evening courses. There are approximately 200 graduate students. The entire student body is almost equally composed of women and men who represent more than half of the states and ten foreign nations.

Lindenwood Faculty

Small classes, close student-faculty relationships and sensitive attention to the needs of each student are important parts of what make an unusually high quality education at Lindenwood. The student to faculty ratio is 12 to 1. Approximately 60 per cent of Lindenwood's faculty hold the doctorate degree in their fields. There are 52 full-time and more than 100 part-time faculty members including many professionals from the St. Louis metropolitan community who bring with them valuable training and current experience in their fields of specialization. A prime example is the private music instruction offered by regular members of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra.

Academic Program

At Lindenwood, a total education combines both a strong liberal arts and sciences program with career-oriented experiences. A wide variety of internships, off-campus studies, independent projects and travel are offered in addition to the traditional liberal arts and sciences curriculum. Programs are people-oriented, interdisciplinary and individually designed whenever possible and appropriate.

The Evening College

Since 1972 Lindenwood's Evening College has provided a wide range of study opportunities for young people and adults of all ages who aren't able to attend daytime classes. Approximately 170 courses are offered each year in the evening with business administration drawing the largest enrollments. In response to the needs of students and the business community in the St. Louis/St. Charles metropolitan area, the Evening College also offers a Master of Business Administration degree which can be completed entirely through evening courses.

The College for Individualized Education

Lindenwood 4, The College for Individualized Education is the newest of the four colleges and is designed for the working adult. Students design their specific study plans with advisers and then carry them out using the resources and support of a learning community which includes faculty, fellow students and specialists in their fields. They meet evenings and weekends in the Lindenwood Centers in Washington, D.C., Santa Monica, California, as well as in St. Louis and St. Charles, Missouri. Many students are able to apply their studies to their work and to use their working situations as a laboratory. All participants in Lindenwood 4 programs are enrolled as full time students.

Lindenwood 4 offers specialized programs at the Master's level in such fields as Art Therapy, Counseling Psychology, Voluntary Association Administration, Theatre Arts, Teacher Education, Gerontology, and Business Administration.
