Text Translations

Bachianas Brasileiras No. 5, "Aria"

Tarde, uma nuvem rosea lenta e transparente, sobre o espaco sonhadora e bela!

*Surge no infinto a lua docemente Enfeitando a tarde, qual meiga donzela
que se apresta e alinda sonnadoramente Em anseios d'alma para ficar bela, Grita ao ceo e a terra, toda a Natureza!*

*Cala a passarada aos seus tristes queixumes,
E refiete o mar
toda a sua riqueza
Suave a luz da lua desperta agora,
A cruel suadade que ri e chora!
Tarde uma nuvem...*

In the afternoon, one pink cloud slowly, transparently floats through space like a beautiful dreamer!

From the infinite the moon appears,
sweetly decorating the afternoon,
What a kind lady she is and the beautiful dreamer feels the anxiety and longing.
She wails and beckons sky and earth to all of Nature!

She quiets the birds with her sad lament,
She reflects the fullness of her radiance upon the ocean
The gentle light of the moon awakens the cruel desire and longing of a smile and cry.
In the afternoon...

Text: R.V. Correa

"O, du mein holder Abendstern", Richard Wagner

Wolfram secretly proclaims his love for Elisabeth to the evening star, and asks it to guide her as death approaches.

"Like approaching death, evening covers the land, wrapping the valley with her dark mantle. The soul that longs for those heights cries out in the darkness as evening moves on. There now appears that beloved star which sends its gentle light from afar. As a friend, it illuminates the valley.

Oh! my beloved evening star. Gladly I greet thee. For this heart, which never would betray her, light her way as she vanishes from the valley of earth to become a holy angel."

Special thanks to our stage crew: Stefany Richmond, Dawn Smith, and Julie Wheat

About Lindenwood College...

Lindenwood College, founded in 1827, is one of the oldest institutions of higher education west of the Mississippi River. There are many fine traditions at Lindenwood, not the least of which is the inclusion of music as a part of the academic and extracurricular programs for students. College founder Mary Easton Sibley was herself an accomplished musician, and some of the school's earliest records mandate vocal and instrumental music as integral parts of the liberal arts curriculum. It gives us great pleasure to continue in that tradition. It is especially gratifying to showcase Lindenwood students at the Sheldon — certainly one of the finest concert halls in the country. We want to encourage you to join us on our beautiful 200-acre campus in St. Charles for other concerts, recitals and theatrical productions. For information about Lindenwood's academic and extracurricular programs, please contact the Lindenwood College Office of Admissions at (314) 949-4949 or write Lindenwood College, 209 S. Kingshighway, St. Charles, MO 63301-1695.
