BULLETIN

Sculpture house on the Lindenwood campus is little known except to advanced art students who spend many hours there working under the direction of Arthur L. Kanak, artist and assistant professor of art. A rare exception is the visit of two freshmen, pictured here watching Maisie Arrington, senior art major, at work. The freshmen are Georgia Garrett (center) and Patricia Springer.

Lindenwood Shares in Ford Grants

Announcement of the grants from the Ford Foundation to Liberal arts colleges and hospitals was made in the newspapers on December 13, 1955.

Lindenwood College received two grants totaling $250,000. One is an endowment grant and the other an accomplishment grant.

Endowment grants were made to the 615 privately supported, accredited, four-year liberal arts colleges and universities in the nation. The principal of this grant must be held for 10 years and the income from it is to be used only to increase faculty salaries.

Accomplishment grants are made to colleges "which have led the way in their regions in improving the status and compensation of American college teachers." The selection of the colleges for the accomplishment grants was made by Ford's College Grants Advisory Committee after six months' study.

In the six state area of Arkansas, Oklahoma, Kansas, Iowa, Illinois, and Missouri 12 institutions received accomplishment grants. They were Grinnell College and Coe College in Iowa; Ottawa University in Kansas; Blackburn College, Lake Forest College, Northwestern University, Principia College, Rockford College, and University of Chicago in Illinois; Washington University, St. Louis University, and Lindenwood College in Missouri.

The use of the accomplishment grant is not restricted as is that of the endowment grant. It is the expectation of the Foundation that colleges receiving the accomplishment grant will make an effort during the next few years to secure at least equal support from other sources, though no formal matching requirement is made.

These grants are to be paid in two equal installments, one before July 1, 1956, and the other before July 1, 1957.

This action of the Ford Foundation is the most significant and far-reaching in its effects in the history of American philanthropy. The grants undergird privately supported, liberal arts colleges and universities across the nation and emphasize the central importance of the teacher in the educational process.

The prosperity of privately supported liberal arts colleges depends upon widespread belief in these institutions. The strength of all is the strength of each. Here is a deliberate decision based on the conviction that this kind of education is good — that it is vital to the health and vigor of our free society.

The gift is a great source of strength to these colleges and will be received with joy and deep gratitude. It is also a stirring challenge to each to merit the confidence expressed in it and to be worthy of the support given.

It is a challenge, too, to the friends and constituencies of these colleges to move forward with renewed faith and enthusiasm. For the grant does not meet all needs of the colleges. The income on the grants to Lindenwood, for example, will be about $10,000, approximately 1.23% of our current budget. For the churches that sponsor this college, for all of us who believe in it and have asserted our loyalty to it, here is a challenge to invest in its future with great confidence.

Dr. Smith, Mr. Johns Become Members of Advisory Board

Two new members of the Lindenwood advisory board, which meets in an advisory capacity with the Board of Directors, have been announced by President F. L. McCluer. They are the Reverend C. Ralston Smith, D. D., minister of First Presbyterian Church, Oklahoma City, and Mr. George W. Johns, vice-president and general merchandise manager of T. A. Chapman Company, department store in Milwaukee.

A native of Philadelphia, Dr. Smith received the B. A. degree from Asbury College and the Bachelor of Theology degree from Princeton Theological Seminary, where he was awarded the Hugh Davies Homiletics Award granted annually to the graduate judged the best preacher. Before going to Oklahoma City in 1948 he served pastorates in Presbyterian churches in Pittsburgh and Harrisburg, Pa.

Dr. Smith has four children, the eldest of whom, Barbara, is enrolled for Lindenwood next fall. He serves on a number of church and college boards, including the board of the College of the Ozarks which awarded him a D. D. degree in 1953.

Mr. Johns, a native of Kansas, is a graduate of Denver University. From 1928 to 1945 he was connected with Scruggs, Vandervoort, Barney department store in St. Louis, rising to vice-president and general merchandise manager. He held that same title with the J. W. Robinson Company in Los Angeles and Beverly Hills from 1945 to last October.

During his years in St. Louis Mr. Johns was active in the Webster Groves Presbyterian Church, and he was active in Presbyterian church work in California. He has two married sons who live in California.

Liberal Education: The Years Ahead

F. L. McCLUER

(Address presented at forty-second annual meeting of the Association of American Colleges on January 12 in St. Louis)

LIBERAL education deals with ideas rather than techniques, with values rather than skills, with the eternal rather than the temporary. It seeks to acquaint the student with the chief areas of human thought and experience, to free him from ignorance, superstition, and fear, to develop within him great intellectual curiosity and the power of reflective thought. The hope that our spiritual and humane insights may keep pace with our technological power rests on education of this character. Surely it is clear that our need for such education today — and tomorrow — is as great as it has ever been.

Liberal education is the handmaiden of the finest growth of the individual. However great our emphasis on social service, we dare not forget a primary obligation of education is to discover, develop, and release the powers of individual men and women. That education which cultivates these powers — of thought, of imagination, and of judgment — not with reference to a specific task, but for their own sake, is indispensable. Some knowledge of the languages and literatures of the human race, some understanding of psychology and philosophy and religion, of the natural and social sciences, of mathematics and history, bring an appreciation of the nature and destiny of man not to be acquired in any other way. The independent liberal arts college will justify the judgment of the late Chancellor George Throop, of Washington University, that this institution "untrammelled and unworried by the educationalism and fancies of the day may prove to be the best conservator of the highest in our tradition and the outstanding home of our moral and cultural values." In the effective liberal colleges young men and young women may become:

"Lords of an Empire, wide as Shakespeare's soul,
Sublime as Milton's immemorial theme,
Rich as Chaucer's speech and fair as Spencer's dream."

As liberal education is vital to the greatest freedom in the life of an individual human being, so is it vital to the life of a free society. Good tires and high speed do not lessen the need for good driving. To overcome the confusion, inhumanity, and destruction of our day we must rely on clear thinking, humane feeling, and exercised good will. People, not dictators, must make the decisions of the future. Appreciation of great values and of eternal principles must therefore be developed in some measure in countless minds if these decisions are to be wise and just.

The education that addresses itself to the whole personality will best prepare citizens for this responsibility. Many of the major functions of life are shared by all in the community. One does not escape the duty of being an intelligent voter by becoming a skilled engineer. Helplessness and lack of imagination before a community problem must not be excused because one is the trained pilot of an airplane. It is, however, not enough to be aware of one's responsibility to the community. Loyal Nazi and Communist youths have accepted this responsibility with enthusiasm. If men are to be free, they must have a capacity for critical and independent thought or their loyalty to the state makes them ready pawns of the demagogues. The very effectiveness of modern communication entails a danger that uncritical minds may be responsive to mass appeals and emotional contagion.

Perhaps the distinguishing mark of a liberally educated person is the capacity for independent thought. Democracy itself can succeed only where its citizens assert the right and assume the responsibility of thinking for themselves rather than accepting their thought from set molds. Sir Richard Livingstone has called attention to the frequency with which citizens of unquestioned reliability in personal matters are willing to distort facts in political arguments. Our democratic society needs the leavening influence of men and women who weigh the facts and make discriminating judgments, who know when a thing has been proved and when it has not been proved, who do not blindly and eagerly assume that one's own political party is always and on all issues altogether right and that the opposing party is always and on all issues altogether wrong.

The values of a liberal education for the individual and for the free community will not be realized fully if those of us who believe in this kind of education are afraid of change. Faith in liberal education is not an easy exercise of respect for tradition. The vital part of the tradition of liberal education is that it should not be static and unchanging, but vital and living and free. Its adherents will not insist that all students of the liberal arts take four years of Greek. We shall not insist that liberal arts education must be defined in terms of the curriculum of 1900 or in terms of that of 1950. Many changes in the content of this curriculum have taken place and many may be expected in the future. Nor shall we insist that it be carried on over a four year period, nor that it be reserved for a few, in line with an aristocratic concept of education happily rejected in America. More significantly, we shall not maintain that it be divorced from all vocational education, for we shall point out its relationship to definite tasks in our society, and in some areas, as in the education of teachers, we seek effective partnership with vocational education in a single institution.

It must be added that if liberal education is to free the individual and contribute to the health of a free society, it must be carried on in an atmosphere of freedom. This means that faculties know the freedom of a measure of financial security as well as freedom of thought within the commitment of the institution they serve. Compensation appropriate to the value of the teaching function will be found, not for the sake of the comfort of teachers, but for the sake of our own self respect as American citizens.

We have all been deeply moved by the grants of the Ford Foundation. This support comes not from sentimental attachment to a particular institution, but out of the deliberate decision that this kind of education should be undergirded across the nation. This support is given probably at the point of greatest need and certainly at the point where the quality of education is determined. This magnificent gift to education should challenge the constituency of each of our colleges to

"Linden Leaf" Featured At Student Parties

Several Lindenwood parties for prospective students were held during the Christmas holidays. Those on which we have reports were in Oklahoma City, Tulsa, Memphis, and Indianapolis. A feature at the Oklahoma and Tennessee parties was the showing of the "Linden Leaf", the new Lindenwood movie, by Mr. William F. McMurry, director of admissions.

The Tulsa party was held at the home of Elizabeth Harris Klopfenstein (1921-22), president of the Tulsa Club, whose daughter Sara is a freshman at Lindenwood. The movie was such a hit at the party, attended by about 35 girls, that a second showing was held for a hastily gathered group.

Gloria Bagwell, a freshman, and her mother, Mrs. John N. Bagwell, were hostesses for the Memphis party. In Oklahoma City, Mr. Les Voss, a friend of the college, was host at a party which included girls from Duncan, Durant, Chickasha. Music was the order of the day, and present students and incoming ones performed on Mr. Voss's grand piano and pipe organ.

The Indianapolis party was a tea, sponsored by the Central Indiana Club, at the home of Joan Marie Spangler Bancel (1934-36).

great faith in its future and to greater generosity in its support.

A second freedom which must be cherished, of course, is that of freedom of thought for the teacher. While the battle for such freedom seems to be won, it is not inappropriate to say that this freedom must be zealously guarded and not surrendered to orthodoxy nor cast aside before any fear. The teacher who is afraid to express a well considered opinion concerning a social problem because of any social pressure is disloyal to his profession and to his obligation as a citizen. The group which would impose a particular viewpoint upon all of its teachers about matters of economic or political policy is disloyal to the nation and to its heritage.

We do right to protest every effort to limit our academic liberties. No one must tell us what we have to think, where we must come out. We must not let ourselves be frightened into silence. Restrictive laws will strangle education, the gray smog of fear will smother it to death. We must strike out against both, finding it harder to meet the atmosphere than the antagonist, but resisting both. Yet, necessary as this resistance is, it is neither the best nor the most that we can do for freedom. Our great stroke will not be the one that sets us free from criticism, but the one that reveals us as free for service. Our amply demonstrated responsibility is the positive offensive tactic which will be the surest defense of our freedom.

In the defense of our freedom, we shall welcome controversy and the right to contrary opinion. We shall seek to know and to grow in knowledge, but we shall also be proud to believe in something and to assert our faith.

As the oak tree, being alive, changes in aspect but remains an oak, so truth, living, not static, changes in aspect, as all life does change, forever new and yet essentially the same. Shall we not maintain in liberal education a steady poise in a reeling age? Shall we not combine in our liberal arts colleges an abiding faith in the ancient verities and a poignant awareness of new intellectual and spiritual heights to be gained?
