LU launches new degree program in Agribusiness

Lindenwood University is launching a new business degree program designed for students who are interested in working in the agriculture industry. With the new program, Lindenwood is the only institution within 100 miles of St. Louis to offer a degree in agribusiness.

The Agribusiness degree program was created based on inquiries from the public and the need to introduce students to the changing structure of agribusiness in the United States. The undergraduate degree is suited for those interested in marketing positions for agricultural products companies and farm operations.

For additional information about this contemporary degree program, call Kay Hammond or Judy Kamm at 636-949-4833.
