2019-2020 Catalog Publication Delay

Publication of the 2019-2020 graduate and undergraduate catalogs has been delayed. As a result, completed catalogs will not be available to students prior to registration for Fall semester 2019. All course descriptions are available in the student portal. Please click here for information on tuition and fees for 2019-2020. If you have questions regarding academic program information for 2019-2020, please consult your advisor or the Academic Services Office.

Art and Design, Fashion Design Prefix Changes

As of the 2019-2020 catalog, Studio Art, Graphic Design, Digital and Web Design, and Digital Art classes will have an AAD prefix. Please filter the course offerings as such to find these classes. All are still being offered, especially the General Education classes. Fashion Design and Fashion Business and Entrepreneurship classes will also change from FD to FBD. Please contact Dr. James Hutson jhutson@lindenwood.edu should you have any questions about these changes.

Important Changes To English Course Prerequisites

As your students prepare for course registration, please note that beginning in Fall 2019, most 20000-level ENGL courses will have ENGL 15000 with a C or better as a prerequisite, and most 30000-level ENGL courses will have ENGL 17000 with a C or better as a prerequisite. (Previously, 20000-level courses had required ENGL 17000, and 30000-level courses had required a 20000-level literature course.) This change will allow students to begin taking literature courses earlier in their time at Lindenwood.

Faculty Judges Needed for Student Research Conference

Colleagues, It is that time of the year again, where we ask faculty and staff to participate and volunteer with the Student Research Conference. If you are interested in volunteering to be a judge for student projects and presentations at this year's Student Research Conference, please follow this link and complete the brief questionnaire.

The Student Research Conference will be held Wednesday, April 10, in The Library Academic Research Center (LARC).

Please add the Student Research Conference to your to-do list for April. We would really appreciate your help. If you have any questions or concerns, please contact SRC@lindenwood.edu.

Library Trialing HeinOnline Database

The Lindenwood Library is currently doing a trial of HeinOnline. HeinOnline is known for its law and government documents information, but it has much more. The database provides a wide range of resources including all of the world's constitutions, all U.S. treaties, collections of classic treatises, and presidential documents. It also has resources relating to the Criminal Justice, Religion and the Law, and Women and the Law subject among others. The trial will run through May 10 and we would like all feedback on this resource by May 17th. You can access the resource from library database page.

If you have questions and would like to give feedback about the resource, please email Nancy Messina at nmessina@lindenwood.edu.

Learn More About LindenWell

Interested in joining LindenWell? Or are you already a part of the distribution list and want to know more? Please visit our website

Within our site, you will be able to find a number of tools and documents with helpful information! Assessment Tip of the Week

Closing the Loop: An Example from the School of Humanities (March 22, 2019)

Guest Contributor: Jeremy Carnes, Program Director, English Language & Literature

When the St. Charles English program developed new program learning outcomes in 2014, one outcome dealt specifically with student preparedness for professional or graduate school success. In the first years that we assessed this outcome, we relied primarily upon a senior exit survey that sought to evaluate student leadership abilities based upon students' extracurricular activities; GRE or LSAT exam scores (if they had taken such exams); and, for students who were going into secondary education, their English content assessment scores on the state standardized exam. After a couple of years, we determined that the information we were gathering was insufficient. The leadership assessment did not seem very meaningful to us, few of our students took the GRE or LSAT prior to graduation, and while the English content assessment scores were certainly useful, they only gave us direct evidence regarding students who were preparing to teach. The rest of our graduates (about 70%) were not being directly assessed on their professional preparedness.

To address this issue, we began to use institutional data on what our alumni were doing after they left our program. Specifically, we used Gallup Survey and First Destination Survey data. Most of what we found when we began to dig through this information pleased us: students who had been out of the program for several years were reporting personal, financial, and/or graduate school success in line with national or institutional norms. One concern did leap out at us, however. While the proportion of our students employed within six months of graduation was almost identical to national norms, the proportion of our students employed in full-time positions was significantly below national norms. Thus, the data were telling us that our students were succeeding in the long term, but that they were having trouble getting their careers started in the short term. This has led our program to make a number of changes to make sure our students are ready right out of the gate at graduation. Our Senior Capstone course has been completely revamped to include modules on professionalization, resume preparation, and hands-on work with internship and job applications. We have also stepped up our efforts to establish partnerships with local businesses and organizations to develop internships our students would be interested in, and we have carved out space in our curriculum for our students to take courses in other programs that can give them industry-specific composition training. Now we will be watching the data over the next several years to see if these changes improve our graduates' ability to quickly obtain full-time employment.

Questions? Contact Jeremy Carnes at GCarnes@lindenwood.edu or x4771.
