

Indecision

Brenna Swoboda

One hand reaches left, the other right. Mind caught in the middle.
Paper pulled from two ends tears down the center.

A door pushed open too far breaks the supporting hinges.
Ease and closure come with difficulty.

A menace behind and glances are thrown over shoulders.
A curtain drawn evokes more interest.

Crossroads taunt a man's indecision.
If the heart were a boat, a troubled mind would sink it.

All that was may no longer be after today.
The ocean tide replaces yesterday's sand.

Embers glow in a tortured mind.
As a fire dies down its core remains hottest.

Uncertainty threatens a lion's repose.
Stagnation suffocates the soul.