Q2 MOMENTS

Josh DuBois updated my computer and noticed I could use a little help with my work station. My current work station is tight and small. Josh came back to my office the next day and installed a double monitor to give me extra work space underneath. Josh was very much dedicated to making my workspace easier and more productive for me.

Austin Holtgreive is the consummate Q2/ideal team player. We recently hired an intern in our office and when I asked whether we could have one piece of gear to help him feel "official," Austin arrived with a full gear package to welcome him to the team. In addition, he recently really went above and beyond, coming in during the week we had a snow storm to make sure we had everything we needed to host a successful women's basketball alumni event.

Kim Willbrand was getting copies off the printer in Harmon 102 when she came across an anxious student outside Room 100. She asked if she could help him and learned the office was locked and the student had forgotten his mask. Kim took the time to walk him to her office and provided him with a mask from her personal inventory so he could get to class.

Each of you makes Lindenwood a better place, thank you!

In communication, what we say is often not as important as how we say it. Individual words and phrases offer insight beyond surface-level meaning. Becoming sensitive to the subtleties of language can help an individual become a more intentional communicator and more a responsive listener. This workshop will help participants learn how to interpret subtleties in language, which can yield more complete understanding. The workshop will also share data regarding faculty and staff communicating collected from students, which participants can apply to their own emails to make their writing more appealing and approachable to student readers.

Get Money Smart: What's Your Financial Personality? with Dr. Rob Rodermund April 19, 6 – 7 p.m. Harmon Hall

You see a smoker puffing away on a cigarette and think “don’t they know smoking will kill them?” Then you see a person who is overweight and wonder whether they realize that eating less and exercising more would help them lose weight. Here’s a clue: they know. There are more factors involved, including psychological factors, that impede their ability to stop smoking or lose weight. The same thing can be true of managing your money.

Join Dr. Rob Rodermund, associate professor of finance, as he presents What's Your Financial Personality? and

Making Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion a Reality, Part 2 April 19, 10 a.m. – 12 p.m. Lindenwood Learning Academy, LARC 009

The current landscape and climate in our country requires now more than ever, that we stand up and become part of the solution versus being bystanders and hoping change will come or progress will be made. “Hope is not a strategy.” This foundational and interactive class will help to establish a foundational understanding of diversity, equity, inclusion, and belonging. We will learn together how we can contribute to and benefit from having a more diverse and inclusive culture, where everyone can thrive and feel a sense of belonging, while delivering a superior academic experience to Lindenwood students.

helps you understand how to make better financial choices.

Engage yourself through Get Money Smart @ Lindenwood, a campus-wide financial and economic education initiative. The program equips students, faculty, staff, and friends of Lindenwood with common-sense principles and practices to take control of their finances and be responsible decision makers. It focuses on the key pillars of budgeting, saving, investing, spending, borrowing, and planning.
