Globalization topic of lecture

Dr. Jo Kwong, Director of Institute Relations at the Atlas Economic Research Foundation, will present "Globalization's Effects on the Environment - Boon Or Bane?" on Monday, March 29 as part of the Lindenwood University's Economic Policy Series.

The lecture will be at 3 p.m. in the Anheuser-Busch Leadership Room in the university's campus center.

Dr. Kwong has played a major role in establishing international think tanks and public policy institutes that are committed to supporting free markets and individual rights. She has also lectured and written on a broad range of environmental issues. The basic premise of her approach is that private property rights and market processes provide powerful incentives for people to be better stewards of the environment.

Dr. Kwong is a respected authority in her field and has published numerous books, as well as writing articles for journals and the popular press.

Admission is free, and the event is open to the public.
